222 pages | Biblioteca Marciana (St Mark's Library), Venice

pp. i–iv — Preliminary pages (title, publisher's imprint, series title page)

PART I: CATALOGUE OF VENETIAN MANUSCRIPTS (MARCIANI)

(pp. 1–75, approximately)

The Venice manuscripts are described under their Marcianus (Marc.) shelf numbers.

pp. 1–3 — Cod. Marc. 314 (parchment, 14th c., 286 ff.; formerly owned by Cardinal Bessarion)

The most important single MS in the Venetian collection. Contains:

- Ptolemy, Tetrabiblos (Books I–IV)
- Anonymous commentary on the Tetrabiblos (same as Flor. cod. 3)
- Porphyry's Introduction to Ptolemy
- Pseudo-Ptolemy, Karpos (Centiloquium)
- Commentary on the Karpos by Achmet
- Ptolemy, Handy Tables (Procheiroi Kanones)
- Ptolemy, On the Criterion and Hegemonikon
- Ptolemy, Planetary Hypotheses
- Theon of Alexandria, prolegomena to the Almagest
- Vettius Valens, Anthologiarum (two books — important source)

Topic: Complete Ptolemaic astrological and astronomical corpus; Vettius Valens (2nd-century CE astrological compendium).

pp. 3–74 — Cod. Marc. 323 (paper, 15th c., 487 ff.)

An enormous Byzantine encyclopaedic manuscript. Catalogued contents include:

- Various astronomical computations (cycles, lunar and solar tables, eclipse calculation)
- Isaac Argyros, Persian astronomical canons
- Maximus Planudes, Indian (Hindu) arithmetic (psephophoria)
- John of Pediastimus, geography
- Proclus, Hypotyposis of astronomical hypotheses
- Astronomical canons from the Syntaxis
- Various astronomical tables and computations
- Ptolemy, Tetrabiblos; Karpos; Planetary Hypotheses
- Geminus, Eisagoge (introduction to the phenomena)
- Eisagoge of Achrates the Persian: an Islamic-flavoured introduction to astrology organized in alphabetical topics — includes chapters on the planets' natures, their exaltations and depressions, time-lords by zodiac sign, planetary faces (prosopa) in the decans, the colours and nature of the planets

Topic: Encyclopaedic coverage of Greek mathematical astronomy and astrology; Byzantine reception of Islamic astrology.

pp. 4–73 — Cod. Marc. 324 (paper, 14th–15th c., 329 ff.)

A major collectaneum of astrological texts. Carefully cross-referenced to the Florentine manuscripts, as it represents an earlier archetype. Contents include:

- Heliodorus, apotelesmatic excerpts (Peri Paulou Exegesis)
- Extensive excerpts from Hephaestion of Thebes, including:
  - On the 36 decans and their significations
  - On the 12 places (houses) and their lords (oikodespotoi)
  - On conjunction (synaphÄ¨) and separation (aporrhoia)
  - On ray-casting (aktinobolia)
  - On doryphoria (bodyguards of the Sun)
  - On the 12 dodecatemoria
  - On universal (kataphysical) and inceptional (katarche) judgements
  - On length of life (chronoi zÁ es)
  - On the tyche axiomatike (dignified fortune)

    - On action (praxis), children, friends and enemies, slavery, travel abroad
    - On division of the chronocratorship of each planet
    - Saturn's, Jupiter's, Mars's, Venus's, Mercury's, Moon's time-lordship periods
- Theophilus of Edessa, Peri KatarchÄ n (extensive section)
- Anonymous: on the synodic conjunctions and full moons (episÄ“ masiai)
- Rhetorius, Peri Kathairesis Ethnous (on the fall of nations): an astrological-historical text on the political fate of peoples from their conjunction charts
- Anonymous chapters: on warlike elections; on determining the victor in war; on finding hidden treasure
- Leukallion, excerpts on colonial settlements (metoikismos)
- Many further interrogational and electoral chapters (over 200 numbered sections)

pp. 4–10 — Cods. Marc. 325–336 (further Marciana manuscripts briefly described) Including additional Ptolemy manuscripts, astronomical works, and miscellaneous astrological fragments.

pp. 10–75 — Cods. Marc. 337–345 and other Venetian collections Detailed catalogue of remaining manuscripts, including:
- Mss containing Vettius Valens (Anthologiarum) excerpts — important for the text history of this 2nd-century CE astrological compendium
- Manuscripts of the Eisagoge of Paul of Alexandria
- Byzantine astronomical works

PART II: APPENDIX — Critical Editions
(pp. 75–222)
pp. 75–110 — From Cod. Marc. 314: Vettius Valens, Anthologiae, Books V–VI excerpts
The first modern edition of important sections of Vettius Valens (2nd century CE), including:
- On the calculation of the klÄ“ ros tuchÄ“ s (Lot of Fortune) and other Lots
- On the time-lord system (chronocratoria)
- On methods for calculating length of life
- On the solar and lunar revolutions (annual profections)

Topic: Natal astrology; Hellenistic time-lord systems; annual charts.
pp. 110–160 — From Cod. Marc. 324: Extensive astrological material
- pp. 110–130 — Chapters on conjunctions and aspects of planets (peri schematismou tÅ n asterÅ n): detailed rules for interpreting each planetary combination — Saturn–Jupiter, Saturn–Mars, Saturn–Sun, Saturn–Venus, Saturn–Mercury, Saturn–Moon; Jupiter–Mars, Jupiter–Sun, etc. Organized systematically through all 28 possible two-planet combinations. Gives political and mundane predictions (kings, wars, famines, plagues) as well as natal predictions.

Topic: Mundane astrology; natal astrology; planetary combinations.
- pp. 130–145 — Rhetorius, On the 12 Places (Houses) and their significations, from which to calculate years of rule of a king; on the planetary chronocrators in elections (katarchai)

Topic: Mundane astrology; royal horoscopy; astrological history.
- pp. 145–160 — Anonymous and attributed chapters on:
    - Warlike elections and tyranny
    - Determination of the stronger party in disputes
    - Finding lost or hidden treasure
    - On the nature of each zodiac sign's trigon (triplicity) — fire, earth, air, water
    - On eclipses and their political consequences (death of kings, changes of regime)
    - Signs of the death of a ruler
    - Abu Ma'shar–derived material on the great conjunctions (Jupiter–Saturn) and their historical significance

Topic: Mundane and political astrology; eclipses; great conjunctions and historical cycles.
pp. 160–185 — Poiema Achratou tou Persou (Poem of Achrates the Persian)
A substantial versified astrological introduction, organized into lettered chapters, including:
- Introduction to the planets and their significations
- On the dignities of planets (exaltations, depressions, domiciles)

- On planetary appearances (rising, setting, stations)
- On the faces (prosopa) of the planets in the decans
- Natures and colours of the planets (from Persian/Islamic tradition)
- On planetary time-lords by year
- Effects of planets in the 12 signs (apotelesmatica)
- On the significations of the zodiac signs and their trigons
- On planetary conjunctions and aspects (same systematic treatment as above)

Topic: Introductory and systematic astrology; Persian/Islamic influence; verse form.

pp. 185–222 — From Cod. Marc. 324: Further anonymous and attributed material

- On the risings and settings of stars (episÄ“ masiai synodÅ n kai panselÄ“ nÅ n) — Julius (Julianus Laodikeus) and Hephaestion sections
- Rules for interpreting the monthly solar ingresses
- On the finding of lost people and animals
- On travel abroad
- Chapters on medical astrology: fever prognosis; disease by planetary influence; blood-letting by the Moon's position (peri phlebotomountÄ n)
- Various horary chapters (interrogations) continued

Topic: Practical astrology; medical astrology; interrogations.

F. 1. Astrological results from the commentaries on Paul by Heliodorus. Inc. The sextile aspect is favorable ... — Des.

[1] I would believe this Marcianus codex, older than the year 1416, to be the archetype from which ff. 99-219v of the Florentine codex, 7, were copied, for in the Venetian book there appear excerpts of various writers, separated and written at different times, which in the Laurentianus are appended without interruption. The text of the chapters, which we have indeed collated, seems to confirm the same. F. G.

[1] Hic codex 335 partim cum Marciano 334 [= 6], partim cum Parisino 2506, saec. XIII, conspirat. Capita communia saltem ex collectaneis hausta esse videntur quae sibi composuit astrologus quidam Constantinopolitanus (ριε' : ἡμεῖς δὲ ἐν Βυζαντίῳ... cf. Paris., f. 126r, τκθ': Περίοδος τῶν ζῳδίων τοῦ διὰ Βυζαντίου κλίματος) qui saeculo XI florebat (f. 170v, c. σλ', legitur καταρχή anni ,ςφι' ἰνδικτιῶνος ιε' [= 1002 p. C.]; f. 194, c. τ' [editum] ἔτους ,ςφογ' [= 1065 p. C.]; cf. Parisin., f. 129r, c. τλε': ἔτους ,σφδ' [= 997 p. C. n.]; adde quod f. 189v, c. σπα', Leo Sapiens [886-911 p. C.] auctor citatur). F. C.

The tables themselves constitute heading οβ' in the index, indicated thus: Περὶ δρίων τῶν πλανήτων ἐν τοῖς ιβ' Ζῳδίοις καθ' ἕκαστον κλίμα.

F. 205. <οα'>. Ascensions of the twelve Zodiac signs of the 5th climate (Pisces and Aries — at intervals of μβ' degrees).

F. 205. <or'>. On inceptions from the apotelesmatic works of Manetho (The horoscope in Leo at 3 or 5 degrees — outside the co-zonality in the inceptions).

*Otherwise (Let not these things escape you in the inceptions — but the alternation of these is harmful).

C. 206. Otherwise (A malefic ruling the horoscope brings incompletion — and occasions certain accusations on account of servile matters).

F. 208. <οδ'>. On the significations of the planets ruling and governing the outcomes (Saturday, first hour, Saturn rules — from both the ruling and governing planet, f. 210). =cod. Paris. 2506, f. 164r.

7. Marcianus 335. — Paper, 15th century, written very neatly, 22.5 × 15 cm, ff. 434, of which the first and last four leaves are parchment added by the bookbinder. Ff. 397–419 and 424–434 are blank. The lower margin and sometimes the bottom part of the text have been damaged by moisture[1]. — Cf. Zanetti, Bibliotheca, p. 154; Morelli, Bibliotheca, p. 217.

F. 15. Six diagrams, the first of which is inscribed: Ἑξάγωνον σχῆμα τὸ διὰ γ' ζώδια ἢ μοῖρας ξ'.

C. 1'. On Agriculture (beginning with the Moon being in Aries... ending: it is beneficial to farm and cultivate vines).

F. 3. Sine titulo. The beginning appears to be missing: Σελήνη μετὰ μὲν τ... ἐπαύξει.

On the configurations of the Moon with respect to the other planets (The Moon accompanying the Sun... to approach the wise and kings).

Explicit at the top of f. 3. Ff. 3 and 4 are blank, except that on 4r later hands have scribbled "liber astronomicus" and other nonsense.

F. 5. The index of chapters of the codex begins here. The last chapter, κμε', On Navigation, ends on f. 11v. F. 12 is blank.

1 This codex 335 partly agrees with Marcianus 334 [= 61], partly with Parisinus 2506, 13th century. The chapters in common appear to have been drawn at least from collections compiled by a certain Constantinopolitan astrologer (ριξ': ἡμεῖς δὲ ἐν Βυζαντίῳ... cf. Paris., f. 126, τκθ': Περίοδος τῶν Ζῳδίων τοῦ διὰ Βυζαντίου κλίματος) who flourished in the 11th century (f. 170', c. σλ', one reads the incipit of year ςφι {vdiktiwνος ie' [= 1002 A.D.]; f. 194, c. r' [edited] Ἔτους spor' [= 1065 A.D.]; cf. Parisin., f. 199r, c. τλε': ἔτους σφδ' [= 997 A.D.]; add that on f. 189', c. σπα', Leo the Wise [886–911 A.D.] is cited as author).

8. Marcianus 336. Paper, 22 × 15 cm, ff. 332 (ff. 6'–7 vacant, two folios added at the beginning), written in various hands, 15th–16th century (the year 1436 is noted at f. 31'). It formerly belonged to Bessarion: at f. 7' the following note may be read: Βιβλίον περιέχον πολλὰ ἀστρονομικά κριτικά. Βεσσαρίωνος καρδινάλεως του τούσκλων. A book containing many works of judicial astronomy, of Bessarion, Cardinal of Tusculum. This Venetian codex appears to have been largely copied from the Florentine codex 10 (Laur. 28, 16) of the year 1382. Cf. Zanetti, Bibliotheca, p. 154.

F. 1. Without title. If you wish to find the year of the Persians, its year. Sqr. without title. Why are the cycles of the Sun called etc. The text is divided into several chapters. Why the cycles of the Sun proceed up to 28. How the cycle of the Sun is found. — Another method etc. - Ends. ... we fall from correctness.

F. 4. [Another hand]. The title is almost entirely faded. ... of the orthodox saying ("Sabellius confesses one nature of the divinity — a likeness of a true thing). It is a short work of Maximus on heresies [Zanetti].

F. 5v. [Another hand]. A more precise account of nature (?) (A small canon was placed after the end — of March, of the southern land (?). F. 6–7 are blank; on f. 7v a note as above is read.

F. 8. The chapter index of the syntagma begins. The title of the last chapter (375), f. 10v ends.

F. 11–11v. Certain notes pertaining to astronomy.

F. 11v. <Isaac Argyri. Παράδοσις εἰς τοὺς Περσικοὺς κανόνας τῆς ἀστρονομίας>. Caput primum est Τῶν παρὰ Πέρσαις δωνκεφαλαίων τῶν ἀπλανῶν ἐτῶν etc.= cf.cod. Flor. 7, ff. 2 ss ; 10, f. 3 ss.

Ex Zachariae Scholastici vita Severi Antiocheni
(Scr. circa a. † 514 p. C. n.)

Severi patriarchae Antiocheni vita a Zacharia Scholastico alias Rhetore cognominato composita, graece periit sed syriace exstat et anno 1893 edita est (Zacharias Rhetor, Das Leben des Severus von Antiochien in syrischer Uebersetzung, herausgeg. von J. Spanuth, Göttingen). Ex insigni hoc opusculo, cuius propediem franco-gallicam versionem publici iuris facturus est, doctissimus iuvenis M.-A. Kugener fragmenta de astrologia latine reddita comiter nobis obtulit. Quae quomodo saeculo quinto veteres magorum astrologorumque libri flammis aboliti sint, egregie illustrant.

Anno 487 aut 488 p. C., quo Severus Beryti iuri iterum studebat, Zacharias et alii christiani libros magicos ubicumque conquirebant. Cum Iohannis cuiusdam Thebani, qui Fullo vocitabatur, volumina occulta detexissent, eum coegerunt omnia in ignem abicere :

A NEW TESTIMONY

From Zacharias Scholasticus' Life of Severus of Antioch
(Written circa A.D. † 514)

The life of the Patriarch Severus of Antioch, composed by Zacharias Scholasticus, also surnamed Rhetor, has perished in Greek but survives in Syriac and was published in 1893 (Zacharias Rhetor, Das Leben des Severus von Antiochien in syrischer Uebersetzung, edited by J. Spanuth, Göttingen). From this remarkable little work, a French translation of which the most learned young scholar M.-A. KUGENER is about to make public in the near future, he has kindly provided us with fragments on astrology rendered into Latin. These fragments admirably illustrate how, in the fifth century, the ancient books of magicians and astrologers were destroyed by fire.

In the year A.D. 487 or 488, when Severus was again studying law at Berytus, Zacharias and other Christians were searching everywhere for magical books. Having discovered the hidden volumes of a certain John of Thebes, who was called Fullo, they compelled him to cast everything into the fire:

L 16,.1 14-17 (.

"In which (books) there were certain images of evil demons, and barbarous names, and glorious promises, maleficent, imbued with pride, and altogether befitting evil demons. They were inscribed, some 'of Zoroaster the mage,

, others also * of Ostanes the mage,' and others "of Manetho."

Shortly thereafter, Zacharias and his companions seized the books of George of Thessalonica and Asclepiodotus of Heliopolis and solemnly burned them:

These books are about sorcery (P. 18, ll. 12–23). Since they had already been caught up in the snare of the hour, and to this city, to Agdiqus

ܡܬܩܢܝܢ ܡܢܗ ܡܠܬܐ ܕܡܬܩܢܝܢ ܗܘܝܢ ܡܢ ܡܠܬܐ ܕܢܘܪܐ ܕܢܬܩܢ ܗܘ

by the command of the clergy, and from these to the chiefs of Damascus a servant, it was a book of sorcery while exalting, through those who had previously heard — the letters and signs, that were being burned — he who read these brought them to the fire, the boastfulness of those writings, which were vain and without God those things like that promise — that promise — of the adversary and pride It is. taught and bitter deeds

The peoples

And they shall be stirred up

And the lawful inhabitants — marriages shall be dissolved, the means and by what together A woman is led. Forcibly someone and how

Of theft or

. In his place they shall go forth of the verdict of the judgment

"We took care to burn the magic books, already seized, at that time. Therefore, with the city's defender (ἔκδικος), the magistrates (οἱ τοῦ δημοσίου), and the clergy brought along with us by order of the bishop, we kindled a fire before the temple of the holy Virgin Mary, Mother of God, with each of the magicians watching and hearing the books and works of demons burning, and hearing beforehand, through what was being read aloud by the one casting those writings into the fire, the boastfulness of the matters recorded, and the impious and barbarous arrogance of the demons, and the evil promise imbued with hatred of the human race, and the pride of the devil, who taught such horrible promises and deeds. For these promises were of such a kind: How cities are to be thrown into confusion, and peoples stirred up, and fathers armed against their sons and grandsons; and 'by what arts lawful marriages and concubinages shall be dissolved'; and 'by what means someone shall forcibly seduce a woman desiring to live chastely into illicit love'; or 'how adultery and murder shall be boldly accomplished, or theft concealed'; and 'by what method someone shall compel judges to adjudicate a case in his favor."

I once attributed the authorship of this commentary to Heliodorus the chemist (Catal. Florent., p. 57), but Boll rightly pointed out that this opinion is not very credible: Byz. Since sometimes the Laurentianus and sometimes the Marcianus is more complete, it is apparent that both lists were condensed from a more extensive collection. On similar indices of divine names, cf. EXCERPTA EX CODICE 3 (Marc. cccxiv).

Ex Vetti Valentis Ἀνθολογιῶν libris.

Libros duos in codice Marciano 314, ff. 256 ss., sine titulo servatos Vetti Valentis Ἀνθολογιῶν partem esse priorem iam animadvertit Morellus (Bibliotheca, p. 197), qui " absque nomine auctoris opus eodem initio libri primi in codice Regio Neapolitano exstare [1] " addidit. Bis invenitur in bibliotheca Laurentiana quoque, quod nos in conficiendo catalogo Florentino fugit, eorundem librorum exordium. Teste enim Bandinio [2], cod. LXXXVI, 18, ff. 19, Venetiis anno 1491 a Iohanne Rhoso presbytero descriptus, continet Ἀετίου Ἄλεντος (sic) ἐκ τοῦ πρώτου βιβλίου τῶν Ἀνθολογιῶν περὶ φύσεως. Inc. Ὁ μὲν οὖν παντεπόπτης ἥλιος — Des. ἐπὶ τῶν λοιπῶν ζῳδίων [cf., p. 100, f. 163ᵛ] et cod. XXVIII, 20, habet f. 258 excerptum, sicut Marcianum, anonymum, quod cum ff. 256-264ʳ (?) eius conspirat. (Cf. Catal. Florent., p. 4.)

Liber Marcianus, quamvis non integra Valentis scripta servaverit, sed excerpta tantum praebeat interdum misere lacera et foede corrupta, magni tamen est momenti cum initium libri primi retinuerit quod deest et in codice Seldeniano 22 et in codice Vaticano 191, ex quo fluxerunt Parisinus Suppl. gr. 330, olim Huetii, et Hamburgensis, Math. gr., III, 40, olim Fabricii. Itaque, cum capitulorum rubricas spatio relicto in codice Veneto omissas, in catalogo nostro repetere non possemus, opus totum lectis summis rebus perlustrare et quae maxime notabilia videbantur edere statuimus. EXCERPTS FROM CODEX 3 (MARC. CCCXIV).

From the Anthologiarum Books of Vettius Valens.

That the two books preserved without title in Codex Marcianus 314, ff. 256 ff., constitute the earlier portion of Vettius Valens' Ἀνθολογιῶν was already observed by Morellus (Bibliotheca, p. 197), who added that the work, under no author's name, exists with the same opening of the first book in the Codex Regius Neapolitanus. The beginning of these same books appears twice also in the Biblioteca Laurenziana — a fact that escaped us in compiling the Florentine catalogue. For according to the testimony of Bandini, cod. LXXXVI, 18, ff. 19, copied at Venice in the year 1491 by the priest Johannes Rhosus, it contains Ἀετίου Ἀλεντος (sic) ἐκ τοῦ πρώτου βιβλίου τῶν Ἀνθολογιῶν περὶ φύσεως. Inc. Ὁ μὲν οὖν παντεπόπτης ἥλιος Des. ἐπὶ τῶν λοιπῶν ζῳδίων [cf., p. 100, f. 163]; and cod. XXVIII, 20, contains at f. 258 an excerpt, anonymous as in the Marcianus, which agrees with ff. 256–264ᵛ (?) of that codex. (Cf. Catal. Florent., p. 4.)

The Liber Marcianus, though it has not preserved the complete writings of Valens but offers only excerpts, at times miserably lacerated and foully corrupted, is nevertheless of great importance since it retains the beginning of the first book, which is lacking both in Codex Seldenianum 22 and in Codex Vaticanus 191, from which derived the Parisinus Suppl. gr. 330, formerly of Huet, and the Hamburgensis, Math. gr., III, 40, formerly of Fabricius. Accordingly, since we could not repeat in our catalogue the chapter rubrics that were omitted with blank spaces in the Venetian codex, we resolved to survey the entire work by reading through its principal contents and to publish what seemed most noteworthy. The materials here made public I partly transcribed myself in Venice, and partly received from Daniel Riccoboni, a most learned gentleman, and from Joseph Bidez, colleague and friend; both portions I collated with the manuscript itself, which the prefects of the Biblioteca Marciana, while the volume was in press, graciously transmitted to me at Ghent. Moreover, in establishing certain passages of the text, I made use of excerpts of Vettius Valens edited from Laurentianus XXVIII, 34 by Ludwich (L), and of a transcript of the Hamburgensis codex (H), which Hermann Usener generously shared with me some months ago.Having collated his notes, Guilelmus Kroll, where the Marcianus agrees with the Hamburgensis

Pauca de fragmentis quae divulgamus praemonenda sunt. In arduis siderum descriptionibus quas capitulo de signis zodiaci inseruit Valens, non semper vulgarem Graecorum doctrinam secutus est, sed quaedam e barbarica quae dicitur sphaera immiscuit. Quod cum in dissertatione quam de hac sphaera propediem editurus est, enucleare sibi proposuerit Franciscus Boll, qui ad lectiones codicis sanandas opem suam nobis obtulit, plura de his verba facere supersedimus. Deorum nominibus ex Aegyptiorum religione, ut videtur, petitis, quae media in caeli descriptione occurrunt, attendas velim, nam cur ubi collocentur, omnino me fugere candide confiteor (cf. tamen Manil., II, 439 ss.).

In cyclis lunaribus computandis (p. 102) scriptor adhibuit imperatorum Romanorum ab astronomis Alexandrinis conditos laterculos, quos denuo recensitos nuper edidit Usener [1]. Cum ultimum cuius anni indicentur, regnum sit Philippi (244-249 p. C. n.), tertio saeculo exeunte, qui haec composuit, vixisse videtur. Quod ad dirimendam litem, quae iampridem orta adhuc est sub iudice [2], ansam praebere videtur; nempe utrum Valens astrologus ille sit huius nominis, quem τῶν τότε περὶ τὴν τέχνην ταύτην ἐσχολακότων τὸν ἀκριβέστατον de fatis urbis Constantinopolitanae consuluit conditor eius, si fidem Zonarae tribuere possumus [3], an sub Hadriano et Antoninis imperatoribus vixerit, cuius aetatis sunt exempla quae profert. Si codex Venetus genuinam huius mathematici textum servavisset, quaestio profligata esset, sed cum valde dubium hoc videatur, videndum est ne ab excerptore ad regnum Philippi continuati [4], immo plane interpolati sint illi laterculi.

Utut res se habet, Valentem Antiochenum ex multo antiquioribus scriptoribus doctrinam suam hausisse constat, quod maxime in eas particulas cadit ubi loca terrae singulis zodiaci signis subiecta enumerantur (p. 93 ss.). Quae hic docentur cum chorographia, quae apud astrologos plerosque invenitur, non quadrant [5], et sicut or agreed with the Selden codex, and where they diverged from it, he duly informed us, and was throughout an assiduous partner in our labor. It should be noted that codex L, written in the tenth or at the latest the eleventh century, was already derived from an archetype that was mutilated — as were the Marcian excerpts (cf. ad p. 96, 26).

A few remarks must be made in advance concerning the fragments we are publishing. In the difficult stellar descriptions that Valens inserted into the chapter on the signs of the zodiac, he did not always follow the common doctrine of the Greeks, but incorporated certain elements from what is called the Barbarian Sphere. Since Franciscus Boll — who offered us his assistance in emending the readings of the codex — has proposed to elucidate this matter in a dissertation on that sphere which he is shortly to publish, we shall refrain from saying more on the subject here. I would draw attention to the divine names derived, as it appears, from Egyptian religion, which occur in the middle of the celestial description; for I freely confess that their placement entirely escapes my understanding (cf. however Manil., II, 439 ss.).

In computing lunar cycles (p. 102), the author made use of tables of Roman emperors compiled by Alexandrian astronomers, which Usener recently re-edited in a revised form[1]. Since the last reign whose years are indicated is that of Philip (244–249 A.D.), the compiler of this work appears to have lived toward the end of the third century. This seems to offer a basis for resolving a dispute that arose long ago and remains still undecided[3] — namely, whether Valens is that astrologer of this name whom, if we may trust Zonaras[3], the founder of Constantinople consulted regarding the fate of his city, calling him the most exact among those of his time who had devoted themselves to this art, or whether he lived under Hadrian and the Antonines, which is the period of the examples he cites. Had the Venetian codex preserved the genuine text of this mathematician, the question would have been settled; but since this appears very doubtful, one must consider whether those tables were extended by an excerptor down to the reign of Philip[4], or indeed entirely interpolated.

However the matter stands, it is established that Valens of Antioch drew his doctrine from much more ancient writers, which applies most especially to those sections where the regions of the earth are enumerated as assigned to individual signs of the zodiac (p. 93 ff.). What is taught here does not accord with the chorography found in most astrologers[5], and just as

The table of Ptolemy is repeated in Lydus, De ost., p. 158 (Wachsmuth) and elsewhere (cf. Bouché-Leclercq, Astrol. gr., p. 345, n. 1). Likewise, the material that Achmet presents in cod. Marcianus 324 f. 225 (above, p. 9) is largely derived from Ptolemy. In Parisinus 2506 f. 162 there is found a compilation drawn from various authors by a Byzantine hand. Among more recent scholars, cf. Bouché-Leclercq in Mélanges Graux, Paris, 1884, p. 341–351 and Astrologie grecque, 326 ss.; Boll, Stud. über Claudius Ptolemäus, 1894, p. 204 ss.

Ptolemaeus in Tetrabiblo geographica sua ex Posidonii libris mutuatus est, ita Valens vetusti cuiusdam auctoris catalogum sibi assumpsit. Ex excerptis Venetis apparet eum primum generaliter regionum (κλίματα), quae ad unumquodque signum referendae erant, terminos constituisse — haec in paragraphis de Aquario et Piscibus tantum supersunt et cum brevioribus Pauli Alexandrini placitis congruunt — deinde eum particulatim (κατὰ μέρος) quod membrum cuiusque zodii cui terrae civitati fluvio conveniret, definisse. Futilia haec dogmata Aegyptios excogitasse notum est[1], et ab Aegyptio scriptore Valentem quoque ea accepisse ex versibus (25, 98) ubi fines Aegypti accurate indicantur patet. Quod pluris interest, scriptor ille ignotus secundo ante C. n. saeculo floruisse videtur. Nam provincia Africa ei est Καρχηδονία (p. 94, 16) et sicut Carthago ita Corinthus (p. 98, 5) anno demum 146 p. C. n. periturae tum exstabant et Ῥωμαίων terra aperte Italia tantum ei est (p. 95, 10). Cum autem Γαλατίας nomen de Asiae minoris provincia usurpet (p. 95, 9; 97 23) — nam Galliam Κελτικήν appellat — post Gallorum invasionem i. e. post medium tertium saeculum eum scripsisse apparet. Eodem pertinet quod " Parthiae " mentio fit (p. 14, 20), quod vix ante Arsacidarum regni exordium (256 a C. n.) fieri potuit. Aetati his duobus terminis circumscriptae bene conveniunt et nomina Κελτικῆς pro Gallia (p. 96, v. 24), Ἰβερίας pro Hispania (p. 98, v. 6), et notiones incertae de Βρετανικῇ καὶ Θούλῃ νήσῳ (p. 95, l. 30) et praetermissio plerarumque provinciarum quas Romani in Europa constituerunt. Notabilis est Σχίνη quoque prisca forma, qua solus usus est hic geographus, pro τῶν Σίνων terra (cf. p. 95, n. 1).

Temerarium fortasse videbitur si ista celeberrimo secundi saeculi astronomo, Hipparcho, tribuere conabimur, sed hanc coniecturam veri quandam speciem habere vix negari potest. Nugatoriis istis disquisitionibus vacasse Hipparchum, utpote cuiusmodi doctrinae curiosum, Hephaestio testatur, qui eum de ethnographia astrologica iuxta veteres Aegyptios laudat[2]. Firmicus quoque Maternus[3] Frontonem " Hipparchi secutum antiscia ita apotelesmatum sententias protulisse " confirmat. Valens et alia ab Hipparcho mutuatus est, quippe qui in primo libro (p. 101) capitulum habeat inscriptum Ἱππάρχειον περὶ ψήφου σελήνης κ. τ. λ. Inde est fortasse quod in chorographia post magnos terrae tractus insulae Ῥόδος (cod. ἄραδος), Κῶς commemorantur (p. 95, 31), nam Hipparchum Rhodi diu vixisse scimus. Commentitia tamen praecepta eum non ipsum sibi finxisse sed astrologos Aegyptios

Just as Ptolemy borrowed his geographical material in the Tetrabiblos from the books of Posidonius, so too did Valens adopt a catalogue from some ancient author. From the Venetian excerpts it is apparent that he first established in general terms the boundaries of the regions (klímata) to be assigned to each sign — these survive only in the paragraphs on Aquarius and Pisces, and agree with the briefer opinions of Paulus Alexandrinus — and then defined in particular (katà méros) which part of each zodiacal sign corresponded to which land, city, or river. It is well known that these futile doctrines were invented by the Egyptians,[1] and it is clear from the verses (25, 98), where the borders of Egypt are indicated with precision, that Valens received them also from an Egyptian writer. More significantly, that unknown author appears to have flourished in the second century before the Common Era. For Africa to him is Karchēdonía (p. 94, 16), and just as Carthage, so too Corinth (p. 98, 5) still existed at the time, both destined to perish only in the year 146 BCE, and the land of the Romans is manifestly Italy alone to him (p. 95, 10). Moreover, since he uses the name Galatía for the province of Asia Minor (p. 95, 9; 97, 23) — for he calls Gaul Keltikḗn — it is apparent that he wrote after the Gallic invasion, i.e., after the middle of the third century BCE. Relevant to the same point is the mention of *Parthia (p. 14, 20), which could scarcely have occurred before the beginning of the Arsacid kingdom (256 BCE). The names Keltikḗs for Gaul (p. 96, v. 24), Ibērías for Hispania (p. 98, v. 6), the vague notions regarding Bretanikḗ kaì Thoúlē nḗsō (p. 95, l. 30), and the omission of most of the provinces established by the Romans in Europe all accord well with the period bounded by these two limits. Also noteworthy is Skínē, an archaic form used solely by this geographer, in place of tôn Sínōn terra (cf. p. 95, n. 1).

It may perhaps seem rash if we attempt to attribute these things to Hipparchus, the most celebrated astronomer of the second century, but it can hardly be denied that this conjecture has some appearance of truth. Hephaestio testifies that Hipparchus occupied himself with those trivial inquiries, as one curious in such doctrine, praising him for his astrological ethnography according to the ancient Egyptians. Firmicus Maternus likewise confirms that Fronto, "following Hipparchus's antiscia, thus set forth the judgments of his astrological conclusions." Valens also borrowed other things from Hipparchus, since in the first book (p. 101) he has a chapter entitled Ἱππάρχειον περὶ ψήφου σελήνης κ. τ. λ. Hence it may be that in the chorography, after the great tracts of land, the islands of Ῥόδος (cod. &rodos) and Κῶς are mentioned (p. 95, 31), for we know that Hipparchus lived long at Rhodes. Yet that he himself did not invent these fictitious precepts, but rather the Egyptian astrologers secutum esse consentaneum est, et sic intellegi potest quomodo apud Hephaestionem Odapsus Hipparcho similia praebeat, etsi necessitudo quae inter eos interest incerta maneat. Vettium non ipsum Hipparchum cognovisse suspicatur Kroll sed Petosiridem et Nechepsonem quorum geographica et astronomica libris innitebantur Hipparchi. Quidquid id est, micas quasdam quae de magna caena supersunt ab excerptore Valentis incuriosius collectas viros doctos non fastidiose accepturos esse confido. F. C.

* Hephaestio p. 47, 20 (Engelbr.) on Aries: wc dè 'Ιnnαρχος kai oi nalaroi τῶν Αἰγυπτίων κατά μέρος διώρισαν οὕτως· κατὰ μὲν τὸν ἀριστερὸν ὦμον Βαβυλωνία, κατὰ δὲ τὸν δεξιόν Θράκη, κατὰ δὲ τὸ στῆθος Ἀρμενία, κατὰ δὲ πλευρὰς Ἀραβία ἡ πρὸς Αἴγυπτον, κατὰ τὴν ράχιν καὶ κοιλίαν Περσὶς καὶ Καππαδοκία, Μεσοποταμία Συρία, Ερυθρά θάλασσα. These clearly flowed from the same source as the table of Valens p. 93, 11 ff. Cf. Hephaest, p. 60, 30, Eng. (below at p. 97, 23). I do not wish to cite the small disputation on the signs of the zodiac attributed to Hipparchus, which Maass published (Analecta Eratosthenica, p. 141), since it is established that this was not composed before the fourth century A.D., although it may indeed have preserved certain things from Hipparchus. [3] Firm. Mat., Math. II, Praef. 2, cf. 4 (p. 40, 41, ed. Kroll et Skutsch).

Quae ex foliis 267-268 codicis Marciani edimus ideo memorabilia sunt, quod nos docent, quomodo optimi astrologi singularum stellarum in alicuius hominis genitura positiones invenerint. Nam quoniam raro ipso die natali sidera observata erant, si quis adultus mathematicum adibat de sui suorumque fato sciscitans, ille computatione colligere cogebatur, quos locos stellae obtinuissent eo die, quo die is qui sciscitabatur natus erat. Methodos autem quas sequitur et per se ineptas esse et ab eo non recte adhiberi non mirabitur, quisquis mathematicorum inscitiam semel cognitam habuerit. Haud exigui vero momenti esse mihi videtur, quod annis fere semper utitur Traiani extremis aut Hadriani primis; tales enim utilissimi erant mathematico nonnullis decenniis post responsa danti i. e. Antoninorum aetate (tali enim plerumque res erat cum hominibus inter annos 110-120 in lucem editis), inutiles ei qui tertio vel quarto saeculo florebat. Ergo ex his quoque exemplis concludendum sub Antoninis fuisse Valentem.

Anni autem imperatorum Romanorum a Valente commemorantur hi :

1. F. 267ᵛ, cod. Marc. : ιγ' Τραϊανοῦ Φαμενὼθ ιη'· τὰ ἀπὸ Αὐγούστου ἔτη πλήρη ρλη'[1]. Est dies XIV. Martii anni 110 p. Chr., qui incidit in Augusti annum 139 incipientem 29. Aug. 109.

2. Ibid., f. 268ʳ : Ἀδριανοῦ α' Ἀθὺρ λ'· τὰ ἀπὸ Αὐγούστου γίνονται ρμη'. Si annos sumimus plenos 148, ut debemus, dies est 26. Nov. a. 119, qui incidit in quartum Hadriani annum (Usener, Chron. min., III, 442). Ergo pro α' reponendum δ'.

3. Ibidem : Ἀδριανοῦ δ' Μεχὶρ ιγ'· ἀπὸ Αὐγούστου ρμθ'. Est dies 7. Febr. a. 120; at is incidit in Augusti annum CXXXXIX : ergo aut Valens non plenis annis usus est, ut debebat, aut γ' scribendum pro δ'; illud verum puto.

4. F. 89, cod. Vatic. (quem contuli) = f. 3 Seld. (cont. Riess) : ἔτος α' Ἀδριανοῦ Μεχὶρ κατὰ Ἀλεξανδρεῖς ιγ' νυκτὸς ὥρᾳ α'· τὰ ἀπὸ Αὐγούστου ἔτη πλήρη ρμη' καὶ ἐμβόλιμοι λς' καὶ ἀπὸ Θὼθ ἕως ιγ' Μεχὶρ ρξγ'· γίνονται τμζ'. Hic prorsus certum est designari diem 7. Febr. a. 120 ut supra et emendandum esse δ' pro α'.

5. F. 7, cod. Hamb. (descr. ipse) = f. 4 Seld. (cont. Riess) : Ἀδριανοῦ δ' Φαμενὼθ ιθ'· τὰ ἀπὸ Αὐγούστου πλήρη ἔτη ρμη'. Concinunt numeri : est dies 15. Mart. a. 120[2].

[1] Sed non tacendum, in eodem exemplo Valentem, ubi Martis locum quaerit, 139 annos ab Augusto ponere; videtur igitur annos exactos et currentes confundere. Moneo annos Augusti 138 recte tradi in libris, ut concluditur ex computatione sequenti.

[2] Cf. praeterea in capite infra edito (p. 101, v. 28) : ἔτος γ' Ἀδριανοῦ Ἀθὺρ κη' :

it is consistent to have followed, and one can understand in this way how Odapsus in Hephaestion offers parallels to Hipparchus, even if the relationship between them remains uncertain. Kroll suspects that Vettius did not know Hipparchus himself, but rather Petosiris and Nechepso, whose geographical and astronomical works rested on the foundations of Hipparchus. Whatever the case, I am confident that scholars will not disdainfully receive the few fragments that survive from a great feast, collected somewhat carelessly by the excerptor of Valens. F. C.

The passages we edit from folios 267–268 of the Marcianus codex are noteworthy because they instruct us in how the finest astrologers determined the positions of individual stars in a person's natal chart. For since the stars were rarely observed on the actual day of birth, if an adult consulted a mathematician to inquire about his own fate or that of his family, the mathematician was compelled to calculate by computation what positions the stars had occupied on the day on which the inquirer was born. Yet no one who has once come to know the ignorance of astrologers will be surprised that the methods he follows are both intrinsically flawed and incorrectly applied by him. It seems to me, however, a matter of no small importance that he almost always employs the final years of Trajan or the early years of Hadrian; for such years were most useful to an astrologer giving responses some decades later — that is, in the age of the Antonines (for such was generally the situation with persons born in the years 110–120 CE) — but useless to one who flourished in the third or fourth century. From[1] these examples too, therefore, it must be concluded that Valens lived under the Antonines.

The years of the Roman emperors commemorated by Valens are as follows:

1. F. 267′, cod. Marc.: ιγ' Τραϊανοῦ Φαμενὼν ιη' τὰ ἀπὸ Αὐγούστου ἔτη πλήρη pan. This is the 14th of March in the year 110 A.D., which falls in the 139th year from Augustus beginning on 29 Aug. 109.

2. Ibid., f. 268: Ἀδριανοῦ α' Ἀθὺρ λ'· τὰ ἀπὸ Αὐγούστου γίνονται ρμη. If we take the full 148 years, as we must, the date is 26 Nov. of the year 119, which falls in the fourth year of Hadrian (Usener, Chron. min., III, 442). Therefore α' should be corrected to δ'.

3. Ibid.: Ἀδριανοῦ δ' Μεχὶρ ιγ' ἀπὸ Αὐγούστου ρμθ'. This is the 7th of Feb. of the year 120, but it falls in the 149th year from Augustus: therefore either Valens did not use complete years as he should have, or δ' should be written instead; I believe the former to be correct. 4. F. 89, cod. Vatic. (which I have collated) = f. 3 Seld. (cont. Riess): Ἔτος α' Ἀδριανοῦ Μεχὶρ κατὰ Ἀλεξανδρεῖς ιγ' νυκτὸς ὥρᾳ α'· τὰ ἀπὸ Αὐγούστου ἔτη πλήρη ρμη καὶ ἐμβόλιμοι λς' καὶ ἀπὸ Θὼθ ἕως ιγ' Μεχὶρ ρέγ' γίνονται τμζ'. Here it is entirely certain that the date designated is the 7th of Feb. of the year 120, as above, and that δ' must be emended in place of α'.

5. F. 7, cod. Hamb. (described by myself) = f. 4 Seld. (cont. Riess): Ἀδριανοῦ δ' Φαμενὼθ ι' τὰ ἀπὸ Αὐγούστου πλήρη ἔτη ρμη'. The numbers agree; the date is the 15th of March of the year 120.

1 However, it should not go unmentioned that in the same passage Valens, when seeking the position of Mars, places 139 years from Augustus; he therefore appears to confuse completed and current years. I note that 138 years from Augustus are correctly transmitted in Kibris, as is concluded from the following computation.

• Cf. furthermore in the chapter edited below (p. 101, v. 28): year 3 of Hadrian, Athyr 28:

6. F. 20ᵛ, cod. Hamb. = f. 57ʳ Seld. (descr. Riess): ἔστω δὲ ἐπὶ ὑποδείγματος ἔτος γ' Ἀδριανοῦ Ἀθὺρ κς' κατ' Ἀλεξανδρεῖς, ζητεῖν δὲ μετὰ ταῦτα Ἀντωνίνου ιζ' Φαμενὼθ ια'· ἔλαβον τὰ πλήρη ἔτη λε' etc. Ab 22. Nov. 118 usque ad 7. Febr. 154 numerantur anni peracti XXXV et tot dies: congruunt omnia. Ex hoc loco concludi Mommsenium recte iudicasse de tempore fastorum ab Augusto correctorum benigne monet U. Wilcken; primam enim intercalationem factam esse docemur a. 22 a. Chr. (Cf. Wilcken, Ostraka, p. 789.)

7. F. 73ᵛ, cod. Hamb.: ἔστω δὲ ἐπὶ ὑποδείγματος Ἀδριανοῦ ἔτος δ' Μεχὶρ ιγ' ὥρα νυκτερινὴ α', ζητεῖν δὲ τῷ κε' ἔτει Ἀντωνίνου Φαωθὶ ι'· εἰσὶ σμγ', καὶ γίνονται δμοῦ υλβ'. Haec quid sibi velint, perspicitur ex initio capitis, ubi praecipitur ut geniturae anni pleni multiplicentur per 5 $^1/_4$ et addantur eis dies elapsi a die natali usque ad eum qui quaeritur. Sunt autem a Mechir XIII ad Phaophi X dies 243; ex 243 fiunt 432, si addas 189; hi 189 dividendi per 5 $^1/_4$: fiunt 36: hi anni geniturae pleni. Atqui Hadriani a. IV Mechir XIII respondet diei 8. Febr. 120; hinc anni 36 cadunt in a. 156, et 10 Phaophi in 7. Oct. 156. Hic dies incidit in Antonini annum XX; ergo pro κε' scribendum κ'. Iam credo sanatum esse locum, ex quo errores nati sunt plurimi; Dodwell enim scribit apud Fabricium, Bibl. gr., II[1], p. 829: " the latest note that I have observed in a cursory view of him is of the XXI year of Antoninus Pius " (ergo in cod. Seld. fort. traditur κα'). Pessime vero Riess, qui in dissertatione de Nechepsone et Petosiride (p. 19) Valentem annum Antonini XXV finxisse putat, antequam ageretur (nam κδ' tantum eius anni fuerunt: cf. Mionnet, VI, 281). Unde vero hauserit annum XXIII (ap. Pauly-Wissowa, II, 1822), plane nescio.

Ad aetatem vero multo inferiorem detruderetur Valentis vita, si verum esset, quod Dodwell narrat (apud Fabricium, Bibl. gr., II, p. 508), habere eum observationes " aerae Diocletianeae anno CLX recentiores ". Quod unde ortum sit scio, postquam Valentis codicem Vaticanum 191 inspexi et partim contuli partim descripsi (multo plura enim continet quam Hamburgensis). In f. enim 106ʳ extat tractatus περὶ χρόνων ζωῆς εἰς τὰ ἐν τοῖς ὀργάνοις τοῦ ιβ' κεφαλέου; eum Dodwell Valentis esse putavit, sive Vaticanum librum inspexit sive apographon (codicem Seldenianum?). Sed ut non premam, quod Valentis textus desinere videtur in f. 105ᵛ in verbis: χρηματίσει οὖν καὶ ἡ κς' κζ' μοῖρα (nam dimidia pars huius paginae vacua est), illam ipsam inscriptionem, a qua incipit f. 106ʳ signo: — terminatam, sequuntur verba quaedam a quibus primo obtutu textum exordium sumere putas, post partem inscriptionis esse cognoscis: πήξεες (scr. πῆξις aut πήξεις) (ὡροσκόπου) μο(ιρικὴ) πρὸς τὰ β' ὄργανα Οὐάλεντος τὰ ἐν τῷ ιβ' κεφαλαίῳ. Videtur igitur homo recentioris aetatis hoc caput scripsisse ad difficilia Valentis de organo suo praecepta explicanda. Absoluto denique hoc capite sequuntur duo capitula sine dubio ex Hephaestione desumpta (quorum mentionem

6. F. 20v, cod. Hamb. f. 57* Seld. (descr. Riess): Let it be by way of example year 3 of Hadrian, Athyr 26 according to the Alexandrians, and then to seek year 17 of Antoninus, Phamenoth 1; I took the full years 35, etc. From 22 Nov. 118 to 7 Feb. 154 35 completed years and as many days are counted: everything agrees. That from this passage it may be concluded that Mommsen was correct in his judgment concerning the time of the fasti corrected by Augustus is kindly noted by U. Wilcken; for we are informed that the first intercalation was made in the year 22 B.C. (Cf. Wilcken, Ostraka, p. 789.)

7. F. 73', cod. Hamb.: Let it be by way of example: Hadrian, year 4, Mechir 13, hour of the night 1; then to seek in the 25th year of Antoninus, Phaophi 10: there are 246, and they come together to 432 in total. What these figures mean becomes clear from the beginning of the chapter, where it is prescribed that the full years of the nativity be multiplied by 5¼ and that there be added to them the days elapsed from the birth date up to the one sought. Now from Mechir XIII to Phaophi X there are 243 days; from 243 come 432, if you add 189; these 189 are to be divided by 5¼: the result is 36: these are the full years of the nativity. But Hadrian's year IV, Mechir XIII, corresponds to 8 Feb. 120; hence 36 years fall in the year 156, and Phaophi 10 in 7 Oct. 156. This day falls in the 20th year of Antoninus; therefore instead of 25 one should write 20. I now believe the passage has been emended, from which many errors arose; for Dodwell writes in Fabricius, Bibl. gr., II[1], p. 829: the latest note that I have observed in a cursory view of him is of the XXI year of Antoninus Pius, (therefore in cod. Seld. perhaps 21 is transmitted). But Riess is gravely wrong, who in his dissertation on Nechepso and Petosiris (p. 19) supposes that Valens fabricated the year 25 of Antoninus before it had come to pass (for only 24 years of his reign had elapsed: cf. Mionnet, VI, 281).From where, however, he derived the year 23 (in Pauly-Wissowa, II, 1822), I have absolutely no idea.

Valens' life would be pushed to a much later age if it were true what Dodwell reports (in Fabricius, Bibl. gr., II, p. 508), that he possesses observations more recent than year CLX of the Diocletianic era. I know how this came about, after I examined the Vatican codex 191 of Valens and partly collated and partly transcribed it (for it contains much more than the Hamburg manuscript). For on f. 106v there is a treatise περὶ χρόνων ζωῆς εἰς τὰ ἐν τοῖς ὀργάνοις τοῦ ιβ' κεφαλέου; Dodwell assumed this to be by Valens, whether he examined the Vatican manuscript itself or a copy of it (the Seldenic codex?). But to pass over the fact that the text of Valens appears to end on f. 105 with the words: χρηματίσει οὖν καὶ ἡ κς' κζ' μοῖρα (for the lower half of this page is blank), that very heading, from which f. 106r begins and which ends with the sign :, is followed by certain words which at first glance you take to be the opening of a text, but then recognize to be part of the heading: πήξεις (scr. Τ'ΗΞΕΙΣ or πήξεις) (ὡροσκόπου) μοιρική) πρὸς τὰ β' ὄργανα Οὐάλεντος τὰ ἐν τῷ ιβ' κεφαλαίῳ. It therefore appears that a man of a later age wrote this chapter to explain the difficult precepts of Valens concerning his instrument.Finally, after this chapter is concluded, two chapters follow that are without doubt drawn from Hephaestion (mention of which [1] De aera Diocletiani cf. Kubitschek ap. Pauly-Wissowa, I, 651 et Chron. Pasch., I, 510 sq. Dind. et Petavii notam, II, 359. Utuntur ea v. g. Philoponus de aetern., 579, 14 Rabe et Palchos in Catal. Florent, p. 100, 106 ss.; cf. supra, p. 81.

I noted in Philol. N, F., XI, 127): from this too one can see that the series of Valens' work breaks off at f. 105. Dodwell, however, misled by appearances, supposed that the two examples of nativities presented in that chapter on the length of life (περὶ χρόνων ζωῆς) belonged to Valens. I have thought it proper to publish them here. The second example (ὑπόδειγμα β΄) states: Diocletiani (cod. διοκτιανοῦ) year 147, Tybi 14th to 15th, hour of night 3rd, clime 4th, etc. This is the night of January 9th to 10th of the year 431. — And further below: ὑπόδειγμα γ΄: Valentiniani regis, clime of Hispania (τὸ διὰ Σπανίων); he was slain at the age of 36, in year 115 of Diocletian; Epiphi 8th, at the beginning of hour 1st, etc. I have reproduced this text as it stands in the codex, preserving the punctuation as well. First, one should write or rather read κλ(ίμα) τὸ διὰ Σπανίων; then, the man who was killed at age 36 must be identified as Valentinian himself, born in the year 419 and slain in 455. Finally, the punctuation must be changed; for since Ἐπιφὶ η' (as is concluded from what follows with no room for doubt) signifies not the day of death but the birthday, it becomes clear that the punctuation should be placed after λς΄, and that the years of Diocletian indicate not the time of death but of birth — namely the year 419, whose earlier portion corresponds to Diocletian's year 135 (and so this must be edited in place of 115).Dodwell, however, misled by a false punctuation and ignorant of the astrological principles by which we are compelled to take these figures as referring to the time of birth, reconciled the number 115 with the year 455 by emending it to 141 or 142 — hence those observations about the Diocletianic era being more recent than year 160, by which I now hope no one will be deceived any longer. Valentinian was born on the 5th day before the Nones of July in the year 419 (Marcellinus, in Chron. min., II, 74; Prosper, ibid., I, 469), which corresponds to the day of Epiphi 8th; he was killed on the 17th day before the Kalends of April in 455 (Prosper auctus, l. c., I, 490). He therefore assigned the clime of Hispania to Ravenna; for it was there that Valentinian was born [Firmicus assigns the clime of Ancona at 55, 1, whose longest day appears to him to be 15½ equinoctial hours; which corresponds in Ptolemy to τὸ διὰ μέσου Πόντου (Almag., II, 6, p. 110, 7 Heiberg)]. And to dispel yet another error: what S. Günther stated (in J. Müller's encyclopaedia, V, 1, p. 21 [p. 243, 2nd ed.]) — that a certain Vettius Valens wrote a commentary on Book X of Euclid,perhaps not distinct from the astrologer — is by no means certain; indeed Woepcke, who first presented certain specimens of that commentary, extant only in an Arabic version, suspects that the author's name, transcribed variously by the Arabs (B. los, B. lis), was in Greek Βαλῆς; there is no mention of Vettius (Essai d'une restitution des travaux perdus d'Apollonius, Paris, 1856, p. 17). father, master, friendship, illustrious persons, honors of images, statues, and crowns, high priesthoods of the fatherland, * of places; and of the parts of the body it rules the head, the sense organs, the right eye, the flanks, the heart, the nerves of pneumatic or sensitive motion; in substance it rules gold, and in crops wheat and barley; it belongs to the diurnal sect, its color being tawny and its taste sharp.

The Moon, having come into being from the reflection of solar light and possessing a borrowed light, signifies in a nativity for humans: life, body, mother, conception, form, appearance, aspect, cohabitation or lawful marriage, nurse, elder brother, domestic life, queen, mistress, wealth, fortune, city, gathering of crowds, income, expenditure, house, ships, sojourns abroad, wanderings — for it does not grant straight paths on account of Cancer. Of the parts of the body it rules the left eye, the stomach, the breasts, flatulence, the spleen, the meninges, and the marrow, whence it also produces dropsy; in substance it rules silver and glass. It belongs to the nocturnal sect, its color being green and its taste salty.

«Saturn makes those born under him petty-minded, envious, self-abasing, solitary, arrogant, concealing their deceitfulness, austere, downcast, with dissembling looks, squalid, clad in black, beggarly, gloomy, wretched, given to deception, and engaged in dealings of a dubious nature. He also produces lowliness, sluggishness, inactivity, interruptions of undertakings, protracted lawsuits, reversal of affairs, concealments, imprisonments, bonds, mourning, accusations, tears, orphanhood, captivities, and exposures. He makes men farmers and cultivators of the earth because he rules over the earth, and produces tenants of estates, tax-collectors, and violent deeds; he brings great reputations and distinguished positions, guardianships, administrators of others' affairs, and those who serve as fathers to other men's children. He rules over substances of lead, wood, and stone; and over the bodily members he rules the legs, knees, sinews, ichor, phlegm, the bladder, the kidneys, and the hidden internal parts. He is indicative of afflictions arising from cold and moisture, such as dropsy, pains of the sinews, gout, coughs, dysentery, hernias, convulsions, and the conditions of demonic possession, effeminacy, and impurity.He also produces the unmarried state, widowhood, orphanhood, and childlessness. The deaths he brings about are violent — by water, or by hanging, or by bonds, or by dysentery. He also causes falls upon the face. He is the star of Nemesis and of the diurnal sect, his color being that of castoreum, and his taste astringent.

The <α> of Jupiter signifies procreation, offspring, desire, loves, associations, acquaintances, friendships with great men, abundance, provisions, great gifts, fruitfulness of crops, justice, offices, civic life, glory, oversight of sacred things, mediation in disputes, trusts, inheritances, brotherhood, partnership, adoption, confirmation of good things, deliverance 5 from evils, release from bonds, freedom, deposits, money, and household management. Of the members of the body, it governs the outer thighs and feet on the exterior, whence it also grants speed in athletic contests; on the interior, the generative seed, the womb, the liver, and the right side; and of substances it governs tin. It belongs to the diurnal sect, of grey and rather white in color, and 10 sweet in taste.

<0> The [position] of Mars signifies violence, wars, plunder, clamor, outrage, adultery, deprivation of property, downfalls, banishments, estrangements from parents, captivities, corruption of women, embryotomies, liaisons, marriages, deprivation of good things, deceptions, vain hopes, violent thefts, banditries, despoliations, ruptures of friendships, wrath, strife, abuse, enmities, and lawsuits; it also brings violent murders and woundings and bloodshed, onsets of fevers, ulcerations, eruptions, conflagrations, bonds, tortures, virility, perjury, wandering, embassies undertaken for evil ends and those who act by fire or iron, craftsmen, and laborers at hard toil. It also produces commands, military campaigns, and war-chiefs, armed men, governorships, huntings, beast-pursuits, falls from heights or from four-footed animals, overshadowings, and apoplexies. Of the parts of the body it has dominion over the head, the fundament, and the genitals, and of the internal parts over the blood, the seminal passages, the bile, the excretion of waste matter, the posterior (f. 257) parts, retrograde motion, and supine posture. It also possesses harshness and abruptness. Of material substances it has dominion over iron and the adornment of garments on account of Aries, and over wine and legumes. It belongs to the nocturnal sect, being red in color and bitter in taste.

<Aphrodite> is desire and love; she signifies mother and nurse. She produces priesthoods, superintendencies of gymnasia, the wearing of gold, the wearing of garlands, joys, friendships, companionships, acquisitions, purchases of property, ornaments, dealings tending toward good, marriages, refined arts, harmonious voices, musical compositions, sweet melodies, beauty of form, painting, the blending of colors and varied work in purple-dyeing and perfumery, and those who are masters or practitioners of these arts, whether crafts or commercial dealings in emerald and stonework and ivory-carving; and those whom they call gold-spinners, gold-adorners, barbers, those fond of cleanliness and fond of play — such are the effects she produces within the bounds and degrees of her own zodiacal Signs. She also grants market supervision, weights and measures, commerce, workshops, giving and receiving, laughter, cheerfulness, adornment, and hunting from watery places. She likewise bestows benefits from royal women or household members, and confers extraordinary glory through cooperation in such affairs. Of the members of the body she governs the neck, face, lips, the sense of smell, and the forward parts from foot to head, sexual intercourse, the genitals, and, among the internal organs, the lungs. She is also receptive of alternative nourishment and pleasure; of material substances she governs precious stones and varied ornament, and among fruits, the olive. She belongs to the nocturnal sect, white in color, and most deficient in taste.

<0> that of Mercury signifies education, letters, inquiry, reason, brotherhood, interpretation, heralding, number, calculation, geometry, commerce, youth, play, theft, community, messaging, service, gain, discoveries, attendance, athletic competition, wrestling, voice training, sealing, letter-writing, standing, hanging, assaying, hearing, and versatile activity. He is also the bestower of intelligence and practical wisdom, lord of brothers and younger children, and the maker of every art of the marketplace and the money-changer's trade. In particular he produces temple-builders, sculptors, statue-carvers, physicians, grammarians, lawyers, rhetoricians, philosophers, architects, musicians, diviners, sacrificers, augurs, interpreters of dreams, braiders, weavers, methodical practitioners, and those who preside over military or strategic operations — as well as those who attempt paradoxical and methodical feats through calculation or sophistry, skillful acrobats or mime-actors who earn their living by public display — and furthermore wandering, vagabondage, and instability. Those who become versed in or investigators of celestial matters, glorying in the marvelous work through delight and desire for the sake of profit — for this star, possessing the power of great method (f.257), produces varied activities according to the alternations of the zodiacal signs and the diverse configurations of the stars: for some it furnishes knowledge, for others advance sale of goods, for yet others service, for others again commerce or teaching; for some it brings agriculture, temple-keeping, or public offices; for others again it bestows sovereignty, advance-leasing, contracting, rhythmic display, presiding over a public liturgy, bodyguard duty, the linen-robed service of gods, or the pomp of dynasts — surrounding all with will render them unstable in fortune and greatly distracted with respect to their ends; and those who have this star in the degrees of malefic signs or in their own terms will be turned yet further toward the worse. Of the parts of the body, it rules the hands, shoulders, fingers, joints, belly, hearing, windpipe, intestines, and tongue. Of material goods, it rules bronze and all currency, giving and receiving — for this god is common to all.

The benefics, then, when well-placed and favorably situated, produce their own proper effects in accordance with both their own nature and the nature of the sign, with the testimony or conjunction of each star additionally blending in; but when fallen from favorable position, they indicate adversities. Likewise, the malefics, when operating in their proper place and sect, are bestowers of good things and indicative of greater ranks and advancement; but when not in operative condition, they bring about downfalls and accusations.

With these matters thus arranged, we must also speak of the nature of the twelve Signs of the Zodiac. 15

Each star is lord of its own essence in relation to the cosmos, with respect to sympathy, antipathy, and mutual affinity, and through their blending interactions — whether by conjunction, separation, overcoming, enclosure, bodyguarding, ray-casting, or the application of the rulers — the Moon is lord of providence, the Sun of radiance, Saturn of ignorance and necessity, Jupiter is established as lord of glory, crowns, and zeal, Mars of action and toil, Venus of love, desire, and beauty, Mercury of law, custom, and faith. [These stars are the authors of their own effects.]

"Aries is the house of Mars, a masculine sign, tropical, terrestrial, commanding, fiery, free, ascending, semi-vocal, benefic, mutable, administrative, public, civic, of few offspring, servile, the midheaven of the cosmos and a cause of glory, two-colored [since the Sun and Moon produce patches of discoloration and skin lesions]; it is also unconnected and ecliptical. Those born under this sign, according to the principle of domicile lordship, will be brilliant, distinguished, commanding, just, hating evil, free, dominant, bold in judgment, boastful, magnanimous, unstable, irregular, proud-necked, lofty, threatening, quick to change, prosperous; and when the domicile lords have fallen well and are testified by benefics, they become kingly, authoritative, having power of life and death. (f.258)

The sign contains 19 bright stars, and along the Belt 23 bright ones, 24 bright stars, 27 dim ones, 28 sub-bright ones, and 48 faint ones. Co-rising with it from the northern regions are the first parts <of the Great Bear and of> Perseus, the remaining and left parts of Auriga; from the south, the crest and tail of Cetus; from the north, the feet of Boötes set; from the south, the remaining part of the Beast. The climates subject to Aries are as follows: the frontal parts, Babylonia, the head, Elymais; the right side, Persia; the left side, Hollow Syria and the adjacent regions; at the turning of the face, Babylonia; at the chest, Armenia; beneath the shoulders, Thrace; at the belly, Cappa- docia and Susia and the Red Sea and the Rypara; the hind parts, Egypt and the Persian Ocean.

Taurus is feminine, fixed, positioned at the vernal equinox, bony, subject to dismemberment, rising from its hind parts, setting upright; its greater portion lies in the invisible world. It is fair-weathered. The individual degrees from the 1st to the 5th occupy the region of the Pleiades, base and destructive, pestilential, thunder-producing, earthquake-prone, lightning-generating, producing flashes of lightning; the next 2 degrees are fiery and misty. The right parts near Auriga are temperate and life-giving. The left parts are base, stirring, sometimes soul-destroying, sometimes scorching. The head up to the 23rd degree, temperate in spring, is pestilence-producing and destructive of living creatures; the parts that follow are destructive, base, and pestilential. It contains 27 stars; rising together from the north are the remaining stars of Auriga, the rest from the south belonging to Cetus and the first stars of Eridanus. Boll in libro de sphaera.

A sign that is world-preserving, earthy, rural, agricultural, of mixed servile and free condition, downward-tending, of few offspring, semi-voiced and voiceless, good, unchangeable, industrious, incomplete, signifying matters of foundations and possessions. The eclipse point lies in the North, rising at its exaltation. Those born under it will be good, industrious, laborious, conservative, pleasure-loving, fond of the Muses, generous; some will be farmers, planters, builders. But if benefic planets incline toward this place, or the lord of the house falls favorably, they become high priests, gymnasiarchs, deemed worthy of crowns and purple (f. 258'), presiding over sacred images and statues, distinguished, illustrious. 10

The following climes are subject to it: at the head, Media and the surrounding regions; at the breast, Babylonia; to the right near the Charioteer, Scythia; the Pleiades; Cyprus to the left; Arabia and the neighboring regions; at the shoulders, Persia; and the Caucasus mountains begin beneath the curve; beneath the loins, Ethiopia; beneath the forehead, Elymais; beneath the horns, Carthage; in the middle parts, Armenia, India, Germania.

Gemini is masculine, bicorporeal, vocal, the house of Hermes, upward-tending, airy, feminizing, of mixed servile and free condition, associated with barrenness, public. Those born under it become lovers of learning, practitioners of letters and education, poetic, fond of the Muses, vocal artists, skilled in household management, undertakers of trusts. They also become interpreters, merchants, judges of good and evil, prudent, curious, initiates of hidden mysteries. And whatever the lord of the house is accustomed to produce according to its own nature — whether good or base, lesser or greater — each individual sign will likewise produce according to the aspectual configuration of its lord, whether it be operative or inoperative in financial matters, lest we seem to be writing the same things repeatedly. They are also of a fair-weather disposition. In particular, the first 3 degrees are of little worth and destructive; from 3 to 7 degrees, moist; from degree 7 to 15 there is good temperament; the southern parts are moist; the final degrees are mixed. It contains 21 stars. It lies in the southwest wind. Adjacent to it, in the spherical sense, a portion of the southern regions is touched by the tail of Cetus; among the parts situated in the southern regions, within the southern line, there is a Satyr touching with his club; in its northern parts it appears from behind, that is, its hide. To the south lies the Lyre.It stands upon the southern line, being midway between north and south. Beneath 35 his feet along the southern line, in our visible world, is the so-called Dog Star before his right foot; it is cut off from the south pole from the hind parts up to the head, rising together with the pole in an upright position.

And from the south there co-rise the remaining portion of the River and Orion. The gods associated with them are Apollo, Heracles, Hephaestus, Hera, Cronus; while from the north there set Arctophylax, Ophiuchus — except for his head — and half of the Crown.

The regions subject to Gemini are the following: in the anterior parts, India and the adjacent territories, and Celtic Gaul; the chest, Cilicia, Galatia, Thrace, and Boeotia. In the middle parts, Egypt, Libya, the Romans, Arabia, Syria.

<K>ancer is fair-weathered; but in particular, toward the two first stars of the south-southeast, it is mean, destructive, suffocating, and earthquake-producing; from these up to the 10th degree it makes the air moist, scorching, prone to downpours and continuous rains; the right parts are mean and destructive. From the south, the Hare, the fore-parts of the Dog, and Procyon rise together with it. It has 4 stars. Of Mars, Mercury, Jupiter, Pan, Venus. From the north, the head of Boötes sets, along with Hercules (the Kneeler), the Eagle, and half of the Crown. It is the house of the Moon, feminine, tropical, the horoscope of the world, servile, downward-tending, mute, watery, good, mutable, public, populace-oriented, civic, prolific, amphibious. Those born under it will be glory-loving, populace-oriented, changeable, highly mutable, theatrical, pleasure-giving, easily corrupted, pleasure-loving, fond of communal life, and public-spirited. In disposition they are unstable, saying one thing while thinking another, for the most part not persisting in a single pursuit, and given to wandering and sojourning in foreign lands.

The following regions are subject to Cancer: in the fore-parts, left Bactria, Zakynthos, Acarnania; in the hind-parts, Ethiopia, Schine. At the head: Lake Maeotis and the peoples dwelling around it, and the Erythraean and Hyrcanian Seas, the Hellespont, the Libyan Sea, Britain, and the island of Thule; at the feet: Armenia, Cappadocia, Rhodes, Cos; and at the uttermost parts of Cancer, at the mouth: Troglodytia, Ionia, the Hellespont.

Leo is masculine, the house of the Sun, free, fiery, well-tempered, intellectual, regal, stable, benefic, ascending, changeable, fixed, ruling, civic, commanding, and irascible. Those born under it are distinguished, virtuous, steadfast, just, hating wickedness, insubordinate, disdaining flattery, beneficent, and elevated in intellect. If the lord of the house happens to be angular, or in conjunction with benefic planets, they become illustrious, renowned, tyrannical, and kingly. The sign is scorching; the bright star in the chest is fiery and suffocating. Up to the 20th degree it brings suffocating conditions and pestilence among quadrupeds in the regions and places beneath it; the right parts are agitated and fiery; the southern parts are moist and fiery; the lower parts are destructive in every respect; the middle and left parts are well-tempered. Leo contains  stars. According to the spherical risings, from the north co-rises the left arm of Arctophylax (Boötes), and from the south the stern of Argo, the remaining part of the Dog (Canis Major), and the Hydra, whose tail extends as far as the claws of Scorpio, and whose head reaches as far as the claws of Cancer.Above it stands the Little Bear (Ursa Minor), and along the line extends the head of the Dragon (Draco), which Ophiuchus bears [as far as Crater]; from the north are Delphinus, Lyra, Sagitta, and Cygnus — except for the bright star at the tail of Aquila — and the head of Pegasus.

The following regions are assigned to Leo: at the head, Celtica and neighboring areas; at the front, Bithynia; at the right, Macedonia and neighboring areas; at the left, Propontis; at the feet, Galatia; at the belly, Celtica; at the shoulders, Thrace; at the flanks, Phoenicia (f. 259), Adrias, Libya; in the middle regions, Phrygia, Syria; at the tail, Pessinus. 25

Virgo, house of Hermes, feminine, winged, human in form, delicate in appearance (corrupt: a standing figure), bicorporeal, barren, of mixed free and servile condition, infertile, inclined downward, earthy, common, half-voiced and voiceless, corporeal, incomplete, changeable, suited to craftsmanship, of dual nature. Those born under it are good, modest, secretive, full of care, living their lives in varied ways, managers of others' affairs, trustworthy, good stewards, scribes who are advanced through words or calculation, skilled at dissembling, curious, initiates into hidden mysteries, spending freely in youth yet prospering in middle age.

The regional lists assigned to Virgo, Libra, Scorpio, and Sagittarius, at the time when the excerpts of the Laurentian codex (10th century) were made, had already been omitted in the archetype, since they are likewise absent from both the Florentine manuscript and the Marcianus. 27 Text corrupt. «Libra, the house of Venus: masculine, tropical, human-formed, ascending, airy, feminizing, vocal, fortunate, mutable, diminishing of possessions, subterranean of the cosmos, public, ecliptic, presiding over fruits, wines, olive oils, perfume-makers, weights, measures, and workshop trades. Those born under it are good and just, but envious, desirous of others' goods, moderate at first, <losing what they have acquired and falling into heights and depths, living unevenly, yet presiding over weights or measures or abundance.

«Scorpio, the house of Mars: feminine, fixed, watery, prolific in seed, destructive, descending, voiceless, servile, immutable, a cause of foul odors, depriving of possessions, ecliptic, dust-laden. Those born under it are deceitful, wicked, rapacious, murderous, treacherous, immutable, depriving of possessions, secretly plotting, thieves, perjurers, desirous of others' goods, accomplices in murders or poisonings or criminal acts, hating their own.

Sagittarius, the house of Jupiter: masculine, fiery, ascending, vocal, quite moist on account of Argo, fortunate, winged, mutable, bicorporeal, dual-natured, enigmatic, of sparse offspring, incomplete, commanding, regal. Those born under it are good, just, magnanimous, discerning, generous, fond of siblings, fond of friends; they diminish what they first acquire, then acquire again, prevail over enemies, glory-loving, beneficent, distinguished, weaving their affairs in an enigmatic manner.

Capricorn is the house of Saturn: feminine, tropical, earthy, destructive, barren, downward-inclining, cold, mute, servile, a cause of evils, licentious, slavish, enigmatic, dual-natured, moist, incomplete, hump-backed, lame, the setting of the world, indicative of toils and labors, of the common people, agricultural. Those born under it are wicked, of changeable character, outwardly good and simple in appearance, industrious, full of anxieties, vigilant, fond of laughter, plotters of great deeds, prone to error, yet capable of repentance, malicious, liars, censorious, shameful. Aquarius is a masculine, fixed, human-shaped, semi-aquatic, singular sign in the heavens; it is mute, exceedingly cold, 10 free, ascending, feminized, immutable, malefic, of few offspring, a cause of labors through athletic contests or burdens and harsh discipline, worksome, and public; those born under it are envious and hostile to their own, immutable, stubborn, arrogant, deceitful, concealing everything, misanthropic, impious, accusatory, betrayers of honor and truth, malicious, 15 petty, yet at times generous, on account of the outpouring of water, self- punishing; it is wholly humid in nature, and its first parts are thoroughly wet, the upper parts fiery, and the lower parts trivial and useless. It has  stars. According to the spherics, from the north there rise certain parts of the right side of Andromeda and the remaining parts of Pegasus; from the south, the southern Fish 20 except for its head — of Hera, Heracles, Hephaestus, Cronus. From the north nothing sets. From the south the remaining parts of Centaurus set, and of Hydra up to Corvus. [The following regions are subject to Aquarius.] The sign lies in the direction of the southwest wind, and is assigned to the region of Egypt and the surrounding cities — from its southern parts 25 as far as Pselchis and the Dodecaschoenus and Sycaminus; from its southwestern parts as far as the territory of Ammon and the surrounding cities; from its eastern parts as far as the Red Sea by contact; and from its northern <parts> as far as the region of Sebennytos and the mouth of Heracleon; and assigned to it according to the spherics, along the southern 30 pole, is the river called Eridanus and the great Fish, touching the tail of Pisces. In the northern regions, within the north pole, is the constellation called Ornis (the Bird), above which the Arrow (Oistós) extends, where the Bear called Cynosura gazes toward the north.

The following climes are assigned to it: in the front region, central Syria, the Euphrates and Tigris, Egypt, Libya, and the rivers contiguous to those of Egypt, and the river Indus; along the middle of Calpe, the Tanais and the remaining rivers flowing from the † region beneath the feet toward the south and the west wind (Zephyr).

Pisces are in the heavens: feminine, moist, very wet, bicorporeal, prolific, prone to skin eruptions (f. 260), scaly, sinewy, curved, prone to vitiligo, dual-formed, mute, highly restless, prone to leprosy, opposed to itself by reason of one fish being southern and the other northern; it is also moist, inclined downward, servile, mutable, prolific, bicorporeal, libidinous, prone to bodily injury, a cause of wandering, variable. Those therefore born under it are unstable, ambivalent, shifting from misfortune to good fortune, amorous, subservient, licentious, highly fertile, crowd-loving; they are, in a general sense, cold and flatulent; in detail, the first degrees are well-tempered, the middle degrees very moist, and the last degrees destructive and mean. It contains * stars. From the north, there rise simultaneously the remaining parts of Andromeda and the rest of Perseus — those on the right — and the Triangle beneath Aries; from the south, the head of the Southern Fish rises together with Poseidon, Ares, Hermes, Aphrodite, and Zeus; from the south there set the Altar (Thumiaterion) and the remaining parts of Hydra; from the north, nothing sets. It is assigned to the north wind.It is assigned to the clime of the Red Sea, having no few islands about it, over which India and the so-called Indian Ocean lie. In its eastern parts it contains Parthia and the Indian territory as a neighboring region, and the Eastern Ocean; from its northern parts, the Scythian territory; and from its southwestern parts it touches, washing against, Myos Hormos and Orthos Hormos and the surrounding cities. Assigned to these in accordance with the spherical arrangement are, on the northern side, Aquila, cut by the northern pole, and in part Sagitta; within the northern pole, not far distant, and furthermore the constellation called Pegasus, within the arctic pole.

The arctic pole, situated in the middle of all the sections, stands apart from all the divisions, containing within itself the Bear known as Cynosoura, moving from the northern regions toward the east, and sometimes also from the southern regions, and the other one, called the Little Bear, which meso-

Hipparchan method for calculating the position of the Moon in which zodiacal sign.

To find by hand in which zodiacal sign the Moon is located in the following manner: add the increment of each king to the year under investigation and divide by 3, not discarding the remainder but retaining it. For if the remainder is 1, add 10 to the number; if 2, add 20; if 3, add nothing — for the number is then even. Then take half the number of months from Thoth up to the birth month, add the days to the first number, and subtract, if possible, a group of thirty. Count off the remaining degrees from the solar sign, reckoning 2½ per sign if it is at the beginning, or the applicable amount if in the latter part. Wherever the count ends, there is the Moon.

Likewise, to find the day of a nativity set up in the same manner: add the increment to the year under investigation and divide, as described above, by three; then add half the number of months and note the resulting number. Next, estimate the distance from the Sun to the Moon, reckoning 2⅓ per zodiacal sign, and compare which number is greater. For if the distance from the Sun to the Moon is the larger, subtract from it the first cumulative number, and the remaining days will indicate the day. But if the distance figures are smaller, add 30 to them and then subtract the cumulative number in the same way. And if both numbers are found to amount to 30 each, then the Moon is in conjunction with the Sun.

For example, year 3 of Hadrian, Athyr 28: to year 3 I added the 2 customarily added for the king; the result is 5; (f. 266*) I divided into 3 <remainder 2>; in place of which I add 20, giving 25; and half of the months is 1½, and the 28 gives 54½; I subtract 1 thirty-unit; remainder 24 half; the Moon will have so many days from conjunction; these I count off from the solar sign of Sagittarius at 2½ each; the Moon falls in Virgo on the given day.

The day again thus: to the 3rd year I added 2 and divided by 3; remainder 2; in place of which I added 20, making 25; and half of the 1 month is half. Making 26½; then I estimated the distance from the Sun to the Moon, that is from Sagittarius to Virgo, as 24½ days. Since it is not possible to subtract the 26½ accumulated from these, I added 30 to them; making 54½; from these I subtracted 26½; remainder 28, which indicated the birth day. For each emperor the number customarily added, as listed below, is derived from the following reckoning.

Augustus: 1, and he reigned 43 years, making 44; I subtract 30, remainder 14. These I add to Tiberius, together with the 22 years of Tiberius's reign, making 36; I subtract 30, remainder 6. These I add to Gaius, who reigned 4, making 10. To Claudius I added, and he reigned 14, making 24; from which I subtract a 19-year cycle, remainder 5. These to Nero, and he reigned 14, making 19 — a complete 19-year cycle. And this one counts. If then we add, to complete the 30, Vespasian's 11, and he reigned 10, making 21; I subtracted a 19-year cycle, remainder 2. These to Titus; and the years of his reign 3, making 5. These to Domitian; and the years of his reign 15, making 20; from which I subtract a 19-year cycle, remainder 1. There is the addition of Nerva, and the 1 year he reigned, making 2. These to Trajan, and the 19 years he reigned, making 21; when the 19-year cycle is subtracted, 2 remain. These belong to Hadrian, and the 21 years he reigned, making 23; from which I subtract a 19-year cycle; remainder 4 of Antoninus. Likewise I add the 23 years he reigned, making 27; from which I subtract 19, remainder 8.These will be added to Antoninus and Lucius Commodus, and the 32 years he reigned, making 40; from which I subtract 30, remainder 10 of Severus and Antoninus. And they reigned 25 years, making 35; from which I subtract 30, remainder 5 for Antoninus; and he reigned 4, making 9. For Alexander, and the 13 years he reigned, making 22; from which I subtract a 19-year cycle; remainder 4 from the addition of Maximianus, and the 3 years he reigned, making 7. And 6 of Gordianus and 6 of Philippus, making together 19 — a complete 19-year cycle.

F. 267. <Title missing, space left blank>.

You shall determine the Sun's degree position as follows: always, on the natal day, add 8 degrees (μοίρας η') from Thoth through Phamenoth. You will find the Sun at that many degrees: in Pharmouthi 7°, in Pachon 6°, in Payni 5°, in Epiphi 4°, in Mesori 3°. For example, in Phaophi 6°, I added 8; the result is 14°: the Sun is at that many degrees in Libra. Pachon 6° plus 6°: the Sun is at that many degrees in Taurus.

Since some of those eager for learning apply themselves more zealously to the handling of numbers, it is necessary for their sake to set out also the remaining planets by hand, so that through such practice they may acquire a pleasing and precise instruction in degree calculation, and thereby make the distinction of the greater sects with all due diligence.

"Saturn is to be calculated as follows: take the full years from Augustus, subtract as many times as possible in groups of 30, multiply the remainder by 12; and for as many times as you have subtracted groups of thirty, take 5 for each cycle, and from Thoth take 1 for each month, 32 for each day, and having summed the total, release from Cancer in sequence, 30 per sign; and wherever it ends, there the star will be. Jupiter is calculated as follows: divide the full years from Caesar by 12, multiply the remainder by 12 and add these together; for as many times as you have subtracted groups of twelve, take 1 for each cycle, 1 for each month, and 5° 9′ for each day, and having summed the total, release from Taurus, assigning 12 to each sign."

"Mars is calculated as follows: take the years from Augustus up to the year you are seeking, subtract as many times as possible in groups of 30, then determine whether the remaining number is even or odd — if you find it even, begin the release from Aries; if odd, from Libra. Then, after determining the number, double it and add 2½ for each month; if it exceeds 60, release the remainder from Libra or Aries, assigning 5 degrees to each sign. Wherever it ends, note the sign and observe the Sun, in which sign it is: for if Mars is found to be above, the star will retrograde from the sign found; if below, it will advance forward — that is, always bring it closer to the Sun from the sign found; and the other stars likewise follow the same 3 Pharmouthi 7th: scripsi] φαμενώθ ἑβδόμῳ cod. 4 Phaohi is transmitted everywhere and I was unwilling to change it. — It therefore appears that the author placed the Sun on the first day of the month Thoth in the ninth part of the sign; how foolish this method is becomes clear, since all Egyptian months have thirty days except Mesori, which has thirty-five or six. 13 Did they therefore have observations made in the first year of Augustus, according to which Saturn was then in Cancer, Jupiter in Taurus? they have the same power, moving around the mean motion of the Sun, and especially Venus.

<T>he calculation for Venus proceeds as follows. Take the years from Caesar up to the year you seek and divide (f. 267') by 8; then examine the remainder within the 8 to see whether it holds a station epoch, and using that epoch, count up 5 the number of days to the required day, if it admits of this. If not, use the one above, just as with the Moon; for if this epoch is found before the birth, it is to be used; but if after the birth, use the one above. Having summed the total and subtracted the epoch of the sign, release 120 degrees for each sign — that is, 10 the remaining degrees of the station from the sign following the epoch release, giving 25 degrees to each sign. Wherever the number ends, there Venus will be. The station epochs will be evident from the remaining years: if the remainder is 1, 3, 4, 6, 7, it is stationary; if 2 or 5, it is moving. The first epoch occupies Phamenoth 30, 15 Taurus; the 3rd Phaophi 10, Capricorn; the 4th Payni 22, Leo; the 6th Tybi 8, Pisces; the 7th Mesore 14, Libra — holding its station in the 8th year.

<T>he calculation for Mercury is to be computed as follows [or: computed thus].up to the day of birth, having taken that count and always adding externally 82, and summing the total: if it exceeds 360, subtract a full cycle and release the remainder from Aries, giving 30 degrees to each sign; and wherever 20 the number ends, there the planet is. Always place it in close proximity to the Sun; for example, if the Sun was at the beginning of a sign, it is possible to find it in the one behind; but if at the end, in the following sign.

Let there be an example for the 13th year of Trajan, Phamenoth 18: the complete years from Augustus are 138. From these I subtracted 4 groups of thirty, in place of which I take back 5 for each cycle, making 20; the remaining 18 I multiply by 12, making 216; and from Thoth to Phamenoth, 1 for each month, making 7; altogether 243. Then I distribute these from Cancer, 30 to each, ending in Pisces; there is Saturn. — Again, I divided 138 by 12: 11 and remainder 6; these multiplied by twelve make 72, and for each cycle deducted 1, making 11, and of the months 7, making 6; these from Taurus by 12, ending in Sagittarius; there is Jupiter. — Then Mars thus: from Caesar to the year in question makes 139, from which I subtracted 30 four times, remainder 11. Since then the remaining number was found to be odd, I recognized that I must make the distribution from Libra. I therefore doubled these, making 22, and for each month up to Phamenoth, making 17, altogether 39; I divided these. I distribute from Libra, giving 5 to each sign, ending in Taurus; there is Mars. — Venus thus. 139 I divi-

Seld.) περὶ τοῦ λαχόντος τὴν ὥραν ἢ τὸν κλῆρον ἀστέρος.

I divided by 8, remainder 3, which signifies a station; the halt being on Phaophi 10 in Capricorn. I take the remaining 20 days of Phaophi, then from Athyr to Mechir 120, and 18 days of Phamenoth, making together 158. From these I subtract 120 for the station and Capricorn (f. 268), remainder 38, and I reckon from Capricorn at 25 each; it ends in Pisces — there is Venus. Since there appears to be much uncertainty surrounding the nativity , I shall set out another nativity as well. Year 1 of Hadrian, Athyr 30; the days from Augustus amount to 148; I divided these by 8, remainder 4, which signifies a halt on Payni 22 in Leo. Since this halt does not operate because it is found to fall beyond the nativity, I go back to the preceding one, which is the third, Phaophi 30 in Capricorn. I take the remaining 20 days of Phaophi [and from Athyr to Mechir 120 and 28 days of Phamenoth], and from Athar to Mesore 30 and the 5 epagomenal days; these give 325 for the preceding year, and for the current year itself from Thoth to Athyr 30 — 6 days, making in all 415. From these I subtract 120 for the station and the sign Capricorn, remainder 295. Reckoning these from Capricorn at 25 each, it ends at Sagittarius 21 — there is the planet.

Otherwise. Year 4 of Hadrian, Mechir 13; from Augustus, 149. Divided by 8, remainder 5, which signifies neither a halt nor a station. I go back to the halt above, which is Payni 22 in Leo; I take the remaining 8 days of Payni, plus Epiphi, Mesore, and the 5 epagomenal days, making 73, and from the current year from Thoth to Mechir 13 making 163 — total 236. From these I subtract 120 for the station and the sign Leo, remainder 116; reckoning these from Virgo at 25 each, they end at Capricorn at 16 degrees. There is Venus.

Similarly, for the same nativity, I also calculated Mercury in the following manner: I took the 163 days from Thoth to the 13th of Mechir, and additionally added 162, totaling 325; these I distributed from Aries at 30 each, ending at the 25th degree of Aquarius — where the star is located.

For the Sun, the 2nd, 6th, and 12th places are favorable, while the 7th and 4th are malefic. For the Moon, the 3rd, 8th, and 9th are malefic, while the 5th, 11th, and 12th are favorable. For Saturn, the 4th and 10th are malefic, while the 6th, 8th, and 12th are favorable. For Jupiter, the 3rd, 9th, 10th, and 11th are favorable, while the 4th and 7th are malefic. [those planets] being in the [said] places and testified by benefics or malefics will be givers of good or evil things, according to whichever prevails; but if they are mingled together, both the bad and the good will come to pass according to each nativity, wherefore it is always necessary to observe the places during the transits for the determination of the times.

On configurations involving several planets.

Saturn, Jupiter, and the Sun render men irregular and unstable in their acquisitions, friendships, and other undertakings of affairs; for they cause losses of things acquired and bring men into circumstances provoking envy, and having shown gains from unexpected or mortuary sources and having increased in reputation, they afterwards suffer degradations or charges, sudden dangers and plots; they also produce guardianships, trusteeships, tax-farming, or leasing of others' affairs, on account of which men endure disturbances or legal judgments, and they render their substance irregular or precarious.

Saturn, Jupiter, Moon in harmony, bringing glory and benefits, introductions to those of higher station, and gifts; they achieve success in their affairs while abroad or in foreign lands, or through foreigners, not only in their own matters but also in the affairs of others; they are benefited by female persons as well, and having come into the acquisition of estates and lands, they gain mastery over them; 25 2 fort. καθ' δ. Some, having become ship-owners, increased their wealth, or those who engaged in occupations connected with liquids managed their livelihood well.

Saturn, Jupiter, and Mars rising from the east produce blends of good effects: some men they make illustrious, holding high priestly office, positions of command, or governorships, presiding over crowds and territories or military affairs, giving orders and being obeyed, yet not so greatly adorned in outward show of life, and entangled in oppositions, accusations, and violent affairs, living in a state of fear. Others they adorn with an abundance of material wealth, making them masters of properties and foundations, gaining benefit from the dead, yet lesser in glory; wherefore the outcome shall be judged according to the positions and the operative influences of the zodiacal signs.

(III. 270). Saturn, Jupiter, and Venus are beneficent and advantageous in matters of action, acquisitive, producing associations of both males and females, bestowing benefactions, friendships, and advancements through affairs of the dead. Yet in their habits they are prone to blame and envy, irregular in their unions, enduring flights at opportune moments, enmities, and legal disputes. Nevertheless they are fond of companionship and easy to live with, delighting in new and numerous friendships, though in matters concerning children and physical health they are not steadfast throughout, nor do they endure without grief.

When Saturn, Jupiter, and Mercury are in aspect with one another, they produce individuals who are active, economical, trustworthy, leaders of crowds, commanding and obeyed, handlers of money and directors of accounts or votes. Such persons, possessing both a generous and a dissembling character, appear at times cunning and malicious, and at other times good and noble. They will become desirous of others' possessions and [advisors or] greedy, on account of which they will endure disturbances and legal disputes, debts and popular notoriety; yet at other times, appearing successful and trustworthy in their affairs, they will receive benefits and be deemed worthy of gifts and honors from those of higher station, and having acquired a generous disposition they will confer benefits upon their own people and upon strangers. They will take part in mysteries and the affairs of others, and in all else will be curious and well-intentioned, displaying in their conduct a tendency toward simplicity.

Saturn, Mars, and the Sun are significators of violent, alien, and dangerous affairs; for they produce bold and audacious individuals, malefic and impious in their actions, traitors, insubordinate, hostile to their own kin, separating from their relatives and consorting with foreigners, falling into harassments and dangers, enduring falls from heights or from quadrupeds, or the terrors of conflagrations, laborious in their undertakings, unable to preserve what they acquire, desirous of others' possessions, procuring their livelihood by wicked means — unless the nativity chances to be of a military or athletic configuration; and even so it will be toilsome, though not without accomplishment.

Saturn, Mars, and the Moon produce individuals who are reckless both in the conception and execution of their affairs and noble of spirit, yet who meet with failure in their undertakings, are beset by adversities, and are entangled in violent matters; for they become violent, solitude-loving, malefic, rapacious, of a piratical disposition, falling into accusations or legal judgments, and experiencing imprisonment and indictments — unless the nativity chances to be fond of wrestling or of arms, so that through such an occupation the pattern of confinement may be fulfilled; and some, becoming physically disabled or subject to affliction, will meet a violent end.

Saturn, Mars, and Venus are at first favorable in matters of profession, friendships, and dealings, producing benefits, renown, and social connections; but in later life they become turbulent and litigious on account of certain jealousies and betrayals, by reason of which they incur accusations and endure enmities toward both male and female persons, and are entangled in shameful reproaches or adulteries, and fall into public notoriety and public disgrace they endure; some, indeed, engage recklessly in unlawful and indiscriminate unions, and becoming accessories [or complicit in counsel] to crimes or acts of poisoning, they suffer no ordinary fear.

Saturn, Mars, and Mercury bring about crimes, deceit, legal disputes, and disturbances; entangled in written or secret matters through sureties and loans, they endure extraordinary legal contests and ruin. In other respects, they render men sharp and quick-witted in their affairs, passing through life in varied ways, slandered by some on account of violent or unlawful acts. Sometimes, falling into arduous or dangerous occupations and descending into poverty, they blame their own fortune, blaspheme against the gods, or become perjurers and impious. But if the stars fall in an unfavorable position, it also produces accusations or imprisonments. If, however, they happen to be in financial or appropriate places, by taking up the legal contests of others they will prevail over the majority, or, having profited from rhetoric, calculation, or military service, they will advance in life.

Saturn, the Sun, and Venus are indicative of great alliances, honors, and occupations, and are the cause of glory, renown, and popular leadership; yet they are unstable with regard to property and the rest of one's possessions, bringing reversals into irregularities, dissolving friendships, and producing diminishments of fortune, as well as public disgrace or losses on account of women, betrayals of secret matters, and in sexual unions and relations, discord and indifference.

Saturn, Venus, and the Moon bring disorder and instability 25 of life, and especially in the sphere concerning wife, mother, and children. For they bring malice and ingratitude, and moreover rivalry, discord, separations, reproaches, public disgrace, and unlawful acts; in matters of occupation, not prosperous but resourceful and (f. 272') in circum-gaining through acquisitions, profiting from funerary matters, yet unable to preserve what they gain, being plotted against by many, or themselves becoming accomplices in crime or poisoning, and serving as advisers to women.

Saturn, Venus, and Mercury produce individuals who are intelligent, perceptive, naturally gifted and adept in initiating undertakings, yet inconstant and prone to cooling their first enterprises, desirous of others' affairs, learned in many subjects, curious, versatile, skilled in medicine, delighting in novelty, change, and foreign travel. But if, under these conditions, the configuration is afflicted or Mars casts his aspect upon it, they fall into troubles and judicial proceedings on account of poisonings, female persons, or deadly pretexts, or, having suffered wrongs at the hands of women, they incur diminution of livelihood and harmful causes. In general, in matters pertaining to the place of women, children, and the body, they will prove unstable and afflicted with sorrow.

Jupiter, the Sun, and the Moon produce distinguished and illustrious individuals, widely renowned, presiding over public, civil, and royal affairs — commanders, military leaders, insubordinate rulers, tyrants — yet subject to envy, slander, and betrayal by some; they are haters of their own household, quick to repent, versatile and unstable in their opinions, haughty, thinking more highly of themselves than they ought, experiencing both great heights and deep falls, adorned with the outward appearance of a prosperous life, yet unable to sustain their good fortune to the end, meeting with reverses in certain respects or coming to a painful conclusion.

Jupiter, Mars, the Sun indicate turbulent and dangerous natures — yet also warmer temperaments and those readily successful in undertaking their actions; they partake of glory, are military and commanding in character, preside over public affairs, yet are also precarious on account of the envy that follows from persons of greater station, threats, plots, betrayals by intimates, and accusations. For indeed some, having been elevated from modest fortune through the advancement of their superiors, are afterwards cast down from their station in life.

Jupiter, Mars, the Moon indicate those enterprising and bold, public figures, with many friends, who attain advancement and are raised from humble fortune and deemed worthy of trust, military men, athletes, men of renown, commanders, leaders of crowds and places, recipients of honors and stipends or of priesthood, yet falling into opposition and accusations, betrayed by their own people and by female persons, suffering diminishment of their acquired possessions, and afterward acquiring wealth from secret or unexpected matters.

Jupiter, Mars, Mercury produce men who are active, ardent, and restless, employed in public offices or military ranks (f. 272)*, receiving stipends or engaged in royal or civic affairs, yet irregular in their manner of life and spendthrifts of their acquired possessions, well-intentioned and trustworthy administrators, quick to correct their faults yet shifting blame onto others, subject to slander and falling into opposition; some of them are athletes, crown-bearers, or physical ascetics, men of wide learning, lovers of travel or those who make their fortune abroad, yet failing in their own affairs.

Jupiter, Mars, Venus produce men of many friendships and fond of intimate company, deemed worthy of great introductions and benefits, advancing in their careers, promoted by women; some of them are high priests, crown-bearers, athletes, or presidents of temples or crowds, devoted to pleasures, yet living at times inconstantly, irregularly, and reprehensibly, indifferent in their associations, (f. 192v) enduring public disgrace and betrayals, delighting in novel entanglements, enduring separations from women, and suffering grief in matters pertaining to children and bodily health.

25 Jupiter, the Sun, and Mercury, in regard to the undertakings of their actions, produce favorable outcomes and many friendships, making those born worthy of trusts, honors, and administrative positions, as well as greater associations and advancements than one would expect from humble elevated by fortune and adorned with distinction, yet unstable in the acquisition of possessions and prone to squandering them, or falling into want at certain times, conducting much of their affairs in secret; yet not without means of livelihood, but greatly benefited by unexpected windfalls.

Jupiter, Mercury, Moon — auspicious: producing men who are acquisitive and well-suited to their undertakings, collectors of gifts and recipients of trust, musical, intelligent, rational, guardians of money and deposits, deemed worthy of gifts and positions of trust, advanced through words and calculations, moneylenders, tax collectors, those who work for hire, with many friends and wide acquaintances, capable of acting as trustees and administrators of affairs, and generous in sharing. Some among them will be athletes, crowned with victory wreaths, deemed worthy of honors, portraits, and statues. And if these planets happen to occupy financially productive places, they produce discoverers of treasures and overseers of temples and sacred precincts; such men will restore and plant, and having adorned places, they will attain everlasting renown.

Jupiter, Venus, Mercury — auspicious: bringing about the acquisition of livelihood and the prosperity of one's affairs; intelligent, straightforward, generous, agreeable, fond of companionship, joyful, partakers of culture and music, refined, handsome, deemed worthy of honor and glory, associating with those of greater station, receiving positions of trust and offices of administration, adorned in their way of life (f. 273), and being fond of nurturing and of physical cultivation, they hold authority over bodies and rear children in good portion, and some they also benefit; foreknowing future events through divine inspiration, being pious toward the gods — yet in matters concerning wife and children they will prove unstable or prone to sorrow.

Jupiter, Venus, Sun will make men of vivid imagination and renowned, but petty-minded and inconsistent in their judgments and arrogant, at times generous and beneficent, yet easily repentant, and at other times in their raised up by the opinions and acquisitions of others, and elevated from humble fortune. They become high priests wearing crowns, those holding authority and command, presiding over public affairs and leading multitudes, deemed worthy of honors or gifts and adorned in life, but in matters of assemblies they will prove lawless or blameworthy. If, however, the planets happen to be oriental or in operative places, they will also find joy in wife and children.

Jupiter, Venus, and the Moon produce active and illustrious individuals — high priests, wearers of crowns, overseers of sacred precincts and temples, generous in gifts and fond of glory, serving the pleasures of the multitude, receiving the trust of cities and regions, deemed worthy of honors and celebrated, yet also envied and opposed by both kinsmen and friendly persons, enduring hostilities and opposition. In the domain of marriage and companionship they live as inconstant and contentious persons, beset by jealousy and separations and constraint, and are of unsettled disposition. Sometimes they do unite with relatives, yet even so they do not preserve a tranquil cohabitation. They engage in partnerships, yet in their association with life they will be given to vain illusions, filled not so much with truth as with delusion and falsehood.

Venus, the Sun, and the Moon produce illustrious and active individuals, given to illusions, yet malicious and blameworthy, slandered by the majority and envied by persons of higher standing and by friends, advancing in progress and acquisition and exalted by fortune (f. 194), yet irregular in matters concerning wife and children; otherwise they are fond of friends, dwelling in foreign lands and prospering abroad.

Venus, Mars, Moon render people neither destitute nor inactive, but variable and unstable in judgment, magnanimous, spending recklessly without bringing matters to conclusion, bold toward men, contemptuous, wandering, audacious, public, military, undiscibearing burdens in their dealings with both males and females, (f. 273r) being slandered and falling into acts of malice and legal disputes, shifting between friendships and enmities, and stumbling in life on account of the machinations of the unscrupulous.

Mercury, the Sun, and the Moon produce dignified, pure, skilled performers, economical individuals, those who assume positions of trust or rank, benefactors, initiates into mysteries, managers of affairs, and those who have acquired the greatest semblance of prosperity. They also become bodyguards, heralds, and those appointed over money, documents, and accounts; and the speech of such persons will be influential in counsel or teaching.

Mercury, Sun, Venus: learned, experienced, good, foremost in crafts and sciences, deemed worthy of trusts and offices, quick to reconsider their actions and subject to irregularity at times, much given to movement or taking pleasure in the novelty of their pursuits, with many friends and wide acquaintance, advancing through the favor of those greater than themselves, adorned in both life and reputation, yet prone to censure. Mercury, Moon, Venus: good, easy to live with, simple, generous, fond of laughter, sociable, partaking of culture or rhythm, ingenious, experienced, well-ordered, clean, naturally gifted, privy to secret matters, serviceable, both admired and envied, irregular in their livelihood and indifferent to the mingling of females and males, yet prosperous and acquisitive.

Mercury, Mars, and Venus in aspect produce benefits, renown, and accomplishments; they make men apt and resourceful in dealings of giving and receiving and in other undertakings, crafty and experienced, advancing through letters or practice; but they also produce some who are censured, prodigal, generous to a fault, entangled in sureties or loans and acting unjustly, embezzlers of others' money, advisors who charm while deceiving, prosperous yet envious, and quick to repent in their undertakings.

Mars, Sun, Moon produce bold, virile, and daring individuals of practical action; for they become athletic, military-minded, and commanding, deriving their livelihood from violent, invidious, and laborious pursuits or harsh manual trades, yet they are overtaken by adversities and dangerous circumstances, falling into the enmities and accusations of those more powerful — unless the benefic planets, configured favorably, preserve their condition unshaken.

Mars, Sun, Venus produce individuals with many friends and wide acquaintance, deemed worthy of introductions and honors, prosperous and fond of companionship, yet prone to censure and much talked about, inconstant in friendships and unstable in their affairs, desirous of many things, extravagant, harmful to women, easily provoked, and liable to be overtaken by adversities and enmities on account of certain failures of rational judgment.

(Ch. 223) Mars, Sun, Mercury produce individuals of wide experience and inventive resourcefulness in the pursuit of their affairs, yet full of anxiety and unable to attain what their reasoning desires, though they succeed unexpectedly; hence such persons prove erratic in their judgments, bold, practical, and quick-tempered, rushing against their enemies, yet repenting when they bring damaging accusations or injuries upon themselves; and at times, assuming a cowardly and contemptible character, they become self-controlled, dissembling, and submissive toward those before whom they ought not to submit — and passing the greater part of their lives in uneven fortune, or even falling into subjection, they will blame their own fate.

Mars, Moon, Mercury — resourceful mechanicians, easily roused to action and constantly in motion, wishing to act with speed, meddlesome, initiates into secrets and privy to hidden affairs, malicious, violent, insubordinate, desirous of what belongs to others, prone to accusations and falling into harms, trials, and dangerous affairs, enduring troubles on account of written documents and monetary matters, yet rendering them prosperous and lavish in expenditure, though failing in the conduct of life.

These matters we have set forth in relation to simple and general distinctions. When other combinations are also mingled in, whether by presence or by testimony, the power of events will be altered according to the nature of the planet and its topical determination; for I did not wish to write at length and in manifold detail about the combinations, since the ancients have already treated these matters. The method will therefore be readily comprehended by those of sound mind from the natural operation of each planet and sign. It is set forth in this treatise from which one must evaluate the placement of the planet and how it is configured — whether angular, or of the eastern or western lot, lord of the Ascendant or of the trigon — and likewise the signs in which they happen to be, whether domicile or of their own sect, and by which planets they are testified; for in this way the outcomes are rendered firm. But if they fall in unprofitable places and alien signs and contrary to sect, the affairs of action and fortune will be diminished.

"On Conception."

These matters being thus disposed, we must speak also of conception, setting aside complexity and setting envy aside. There being three limits — the least, the middle, and the greatest — the excess of each is fifteen degrees; which, if we add or subtract from each limit, the other will be grasped. The least is 250 days, which is demonstrated when the Moon is past the western degree, that is, when the Moon is in her setting; the middle is 270, which is manifest when the Moon is on the Ascendant; and the greatest is 278, which is manifest when the Moon is at setting. For the fifteen degrees of excess, if we measure them across the hemisphere — that is, from the Ascendant to the Descendant — we find that 2½ degrees fall to each sign. Let Cancer be rising and Capricorn setting; if the Moon is found above the degree of the Descendant, the period of conception is 250 days; if she is in Aquarius, 260½; if in Pisces, two hundred and three; but if in Aries, 205½; if in Taurus, 268; if in Gemini, 270½; if in Cancer on the Ascendant, 273; if in Leo, 275½; if in Libra (f.274r), 280½; if in Sagittarius, 285½; if in Capricorn, 288. Let the following serve as an example: in year 8 5 of Nero, Mesori 6th going into the 7th, at hour 11, with the Moon in Libra and the Ascendant in Cancer. Since the Moon was found at the angle, the birth was reckoned after 280 days and 12 hours; these therefore must be subtracted from the 365¼ days of the year, leaving 84 days and 12 hours. If then we add the 84 days to Mesori 6th, the result will be Phaophi 20th, hour 23, which will be the day of 10 conception. Etc.

Shortly after, another example is found: Ἔστω δὲ πάλιν ἐπὶ ὑποδείγματος, ἵνα σαφέστερον οἱ ἐπιτυγχάνοντες τὴν ἐπίγνωσιν λαμβάνωσιν, Ἀδριανοῦ ἔτος ι', Μεχίρ ιγ' εἰς τὴν ιδ΄, ἡμερινῆς ὥρας α'... On the Lot of Fortune and its Ruler.

Wishing to establish more precisely the place of good fortune, I return to the Lot of Fortune, which is the most essential and powerful place, just as the king, at the outset of the thirteenth book, mystically declared, saying: "It will be necessary, successively, for those born during the day, to count clearly from the Sun to the Moon, and conversely from the Ascendant to assign equality and to observe the place that results, to determine which star it has fallen upon, and which planet or planets approach it, together with the trines and squares in their entirety, as has been recorded. For from this foreknowledge of the places you will judge clearly the affairs of those born; and likewise Petosiris in the Boundaries revealed this place; others treat it in various ways, among whom we too shall set forth in due time other methods indicating the place or account of good fortune; but for now we must speak of the matter at hand.

But if it receives testimony from Jupiter ... Des. (f. 277.) ... but if a malefic is present or overcoming the Moon, the children will be useless. — II, 4 S, which also has the following.

When the malefics happen to be in this place, they bring about great injuries and falls, especially when they are in their own faces; and many will also have their hands cut off.

When the benefics are placed in domicile in the benefic sign or are prominent in their own faces, they make the native illustrious and wealthy from youth ... for they produce those who are exceedingly distinguished and rich.

In this place both the benefics and the malefics rejoice, especially when they have obtained by lot the Lot, or the Ascendant, or the Daimon ... Des. (f. 278') ... it produces those who are meddlesome, or barren, or childless.

If the benefics happen to be in this place and obtain the lot of the Ascendant or of Fortune, the native is blessed, pious, a prophet of a great god, and shall be heeded as a god ... or they become possessed within temples, on account of sufferings or pleasures.

The benefics present in this place are inactive, weak, and deprived of their own good effects. But if they also gain rulership over the Ascendant and the lot ... they shall rejoice in children.

The benefics being present or rising with the Ascendant or the Lot of Fortune signify good things for the natives ... Des. (f. 278) ... and fortunate into old age.

If the benefics happen to be present in this place, the native, whatever he acquires, he shall lose ... Free and of good repute shall they become.

If the benefics happen to obtain the lot of the Ascendant or the Lot of Fortune, the native shall be great ... Des. (f. 279ε) ... they are not able to cause harm.

If the benefics gain rulership over the Ascendant or Fortune and are present, they shall spend their life in sacred precincts ••• to whomever they wish they leave their own possessions.

In this sign, if the Moon happens to have obtained the lot of the Ascendant or the Lot, appearing in her own face, the native shall be great ... Des. (f. 279b) they shall have their sight clouded, their eyes shall become glazed over.

The god signifies the father, the goddess signifies the mother, the Good Daemon signifies children, Good Fortune signifies marriage, the Evil Daemon signifies afflictions, Evil Fortune signifies bodily injuries (f. 280*), the Lot of Fortune and the Ascendant signify life and livelihood, the Daemon signifies intelligence, the Midheaven signifies action, Eros signifies desire, Necessity signifies enemies.

Jupiter in trine with the Sun signifies great and distinguished persons; and if the Sun occupies the Ascendant, both for the father and for the nativity, and if it is angular for the father, it signifies distinction, unless some other cause corrects this; but if Saturn from the left forms a trine with the Sun ascending, 35 (= S., f. 10°). There follow many such passages concerning trines, to each of which are subjoined some remarks on squares and sextiles, for the most part brief and concise: F. 282, in the middle of a chapter, reads: In general, in every nativity it is understood that whatever each of the planets produces in trine, they produce equally when conjoined in the same sign. 40 Mercury in sextile with the Moon is rendered more obscure and weaker than those previously mentioned; but if it happens to be in square — sharp, shrewd ... those in the declining houses — lesser and humble. Having set forth the doctrine of the trigonal order, I shall pass again to the Lot of Good Fortune and the Lot of the Daimon; above all, therefore, one must precisely determine the Lot of Fortune and examine into which region of the cosmos it has fallen — whether at the angles, the succedents, or the cadents — and likewise its ruler ... «On the Exaltation of the Sun and Moon in Relation to Felicity». We ourselves have also found by experience a certain secret place: for a daytime birth, count from the natal Sun to Aries, which is its exaltation, and for a nighttime birth, from the Moon to Taurus, and the same distance from the Ascendant ... ... having suffered misfortune and having fallen, they afterwards found good fortune through other affairs.

Therefore, concerning the plots of actions and their reversals, the Lot and the Daimon will hold great power; for the one reveals matters concerning the body and the crafts performed by the hands, while the Daimon and its lord reveal matters concerning the soul and the mind, and the actions carried out through words and acquisitions, ... Des. (f. 284v) ... and often such persons are not made heirs by their own kin, but are made heirs by strangers. = S, f. 16v, which is much fuller.

These powerful places I have necessarily appended to the section on illustrious and distinguished nativities: when the Sun and Moon, being in operative signs, are attended by bodyguards of the majority of oriental planets, with none of the malefics in opposition, they produce fortunate and distinguished, commanding and regal nativities, and those born will be prosperous... – Des. F. 285v. If the Lot concerning debt falls, or its lord falls, into the square aspects ..... and you will find the matters of the substance connected with theft and assault. – S, f. 20.

It then provides some content on περί κλοπῆς (on theft) and περὶ ἐνέδρας (on ambush). Inc. Ἀριθμεῖται δὲ ὁ περὶ κλοπῆς... - Des. συννοητέος ὁ τρόπος. EXCERPTS FROM CODEX 5 (MARC. CCCXXIV)

From the "Introduction and Foundation of Astrology" by Achmet[1].

F. 202. Introduction and Foundation of Astrology: A Work by Achmat the Persian.

1. The composition of this book was drawn from the books of the Persians by Achmat, who, as he stated, gathered together the books found from Adam's time down to his own day, and from them constructed a foundation as truthfully as possible, drawing from each chronography, each judgment, each inception and nativity, each revolution of the year, conjunctions, interrogations, and discourses; and from all of these he composed a first book and named it Introduction and Foundation — Introduction as an entry into learning, and Foundation as the most reliable basis for demonstration — and he divided it into four books.

2. Proem to Astrology from the First Discourse of the Persians.

It should be known that the art and systematic study of astronomers has two primary concepts and subject matters: one, that one may know the stars and their motion and their daily positions, and have a true estimation

1 Here we have presented the proem and certain chapters of Achmet's Introduction in order that a judgment may more readily be formed regarding the nature of a work hitherto unknown. Whether its author is the same as Ἀχμέτ υἱὸς Σερεὶμ ὁ ὀνειροκρίτης, chief counselor of Ma'mun, whose Oneirocritica was edited by Rigaltius (Paris 1603), is uncertain, though it seems unlikely, for that Achmet flourished around A.D. 820 (Krumbacher, Gesch. Byz. Lit., p. 630, 2nd ed.; Ruelle, Rev. ét. gr., VII, p. 305), whereas these astrological books appear to have been composed no earlier than the tenth century, since they contain much material drawn from Albumasar, who died in A.D. 885. Perhaps one should think of Abu Ja'far Ahmad ibn Yusuf ibn Ibrahim, not a Persian but an Egyptian, who died around A.D. 945 (Steinschneider, Hebräische Uebersetz. des Mittelalters, § 326, p. 326). But one should also consider whether the work, wholly or in part, was falsely attributed to a distinguished astrologer by a forger, for whoever compiled these materials plundered Hephaestion of Thebes (above, p. 13, n. 1). — The astrological books of Achmet are found in various codices, e.g., in Angelicanus 30, 13th century, f. 181r ff. (Studi italiani di fil., IV, cod. 62), and in cod. Palatinus Vatic. 312, ff. 86–115. F. G.

Γ. 226. νη'. On the configurations of all the stars, as stated by Maseres the Persian and Muchametes the Palchiotian, translated from the Persian language.

On Saturn and Jupiter.

When Saturn conjoins with Jupiter, it signifies the destruction of all manner of buildings — namely houses and cities — as well as opposition to sacred and divine matters. If this occurs in the house of Saturn, then the evils are further increased; but if in the house of Jupiter, the harm is lesser, as Jupiter prevails. If Jupiter forms a sextile or trine aspect with Saturn, it signifies many disturbances and legal disputes among men, especially among kings, magnates, and native inhabitants.If, then, these two planets are found in a dignified position in their own power — that is, in their own houses — the aforesaid effects will come to pass. But if one brings great favor, it signifies the goodness of monks, elders, and native inhabitants, the joy of servants, the abundance of provisions, and the power of kings and magnates. If the aspect is a square from the fourth house, it signifies the suppression of kings in matters of faith and law, portending many wars, dissimulations, and the wickedness of a high priest. If the aspect is an opposition, it signifies wars, the displacement of kings and tyrants, a multitude of affairs, corruption of faith and religions, and scarcity of provisions. If the configuration is from the tenth house, it signifies conflict between kings and high priests, and further, the wickedness of elders and monks.

On Saturn and Mars.

If Mars forms a conjunction with Saturn, it signifies losses among the local population, raids and ambushes by soldiers, seditions, bilious tumors, skin eruptions, and wounds among the people; 35 especially if the sign is fiery or airy, for there will be wickedness and machinations among the common people of those cities whose sign of the conjunction is rising as the ascendant; it also signifies the destruction of the king of that same city, and the kingship of that same city will be succeeded by the king of another place. But if their configuration is a sextile or trine, it signifies difficulties among the people, bonds, servitude, legal disputes, and the movement of an army, as well as an abundance of rain if the season is such; if it is a square, it signifies the appearance of thieves and brigands, loss for the elderly and goldsmiths and the confiscation of their properties, the siege of cities, and the deceitfulness of men; and the opposition acts similarly to it; if the configuration is from the 10th house, it signifies loss and toil from kings for the neighboring peoples, and great loss among the common people, especially when that city has its ascendant in one of the signs of Mars.

On Saturn and the Sun.

If the Sun is in conjunction with Saturn, it indicates inactivity in the services of the great men; but if it is in sextile or trine, it indicates the greed of kings over the affairs of their subjects, and likewise of the great men; if it is in square, it indicates a council of kings with rulers; if it is in opposition from the 7th, it indicates strife between the subjects and the king, and words from humble and lowly men will come to light; if it is from the 10th, it indicates that the kings will be afraid of their subjects, and the subjects in turn will likewise be afraid of the kings, and there will be retributions and imprisonments between them.

On Saturn and Venus.

The conjunction of Venus with Saturn indicates the wickedness of women, and those who are under the influence of Venus will suffer hardship; if the season is wintry, there will be a powerful cold, the affairs of the elders will be middling, there will be a multitude of infants and much false speech, so that the hearts of men will be constricted and distressed, as will those who dwell in coastal regions; there will be wickedness, and all that is traded by sea will prosper, such as pearls and the like, and fear and trembling will seize the common people. But if they are in sextile or trine, it indicates the goodheartedness of women on the part of the elders and the beauty of their affairs, and rain if the season is such. If they are in square, it indicates difficulty and difficult childbirth for women, as well as disturbances between men and women and rain in its season. If their square is from the fourth house, it indicates wickedness and great wonder among them, furthermore

When Mercury is in conjunction with Saturn, it indicates that the winds  will prevail with regard to sorceries and magic arts. Likewise, spectacle and wickedness 10 of grammarians and destruction of seasonal fruits, if it be their season; but if sextile or trine, it indicates that men will look into royal affairs and spy and seek out dispatches, and if it is the rainy season there will be much rain, but if not, there will be wind and much dust and many illnesses; if square, men will grope after 15 the secrets of the wise, that is, they will investigate and scrutinize the wise; but if the square ⟨aspect falls from the fourth house⟩, from them will come falsehoods and evil dispatches and losses for scholars, many ⟨and⟩ deaths and illnesses, as well as wind and rain in its due season; but if from the 7th, it indicates falsehoods and many slanders 20 among the people, along with losses and great expenditures, prosperity of four-footed animals, great military campaigns and much unrest, and on account of this upheaval the majority of worldly men will depart from their places, and the cities that are associated with the sign in which Mercury is located, or with Mercury, will fall under tyranny; and there will also be much wind and 25 rain; but if from the 10th, it indicates that men will prevail in schemes and slanders; and the affairs of overseers, servants, and kings will be thrown into confusion.

"On Saturn and the Moon."

If the Moon is in conjunction with Saturn, the servitude of men will turn to wickedness, and furthermore any agreement they make will lack stability; there will also be displacements of the inhabitants of their places, especially at the hour of the horoscope of Saturn or at the ascendant of the conjunction — it will become the ascendant of the world — and the waters of the wells will diminish. of cold, and moreover the station of the Moon in a cold mixture portends heavy snow, until many crops and plantings will be destroyed. For agreements, betrothals, and the surrender of territory, it is greatly favorable. If, however, it is configured from the fourth house, it portends contentious disputes, fear in the hearts of men, and encounters between them fraught with great apprehension. If from the seventh, it portends wars and enmity among men, so that they shun one another's company and love quiet; it also portends authority over neighboring peoples exercised by kings. If from the tenth, it portends conflict among kings, especially if they have an unfavorable configuration. 10

Γ. 227. On the Configurations of Jupiter and Mars.

If Mars conjoins Jupiter, it indicates difficulty among people in their labors, such that they find fault with them, and ignorance and folly especially in that very clime and in the cities associated with the sign in which they conjoin — that is, those cities whose ascendant at their founding is that sign. At the beginning of the conjunction there will be death, and toward its end, hardship and distress; it further indicates that the king of that same city governed by the sign of the conjunction will suffer harm. If Mars is in sextile or trine, it indicates that people will undergo great toil in matters of religion in order to reform them, and goodness among messengers and rulers, and joy among kings. If Mars squares from the fourth house, it indicates wars and disturbances, wickedness in secret affairs, a multitude of thieves and brigands, the tyranny of merchants, malice among Muslim kings, the death of certain monks and magnates who are governed by the sign of Mars, and the besieging of cities. If from the seventh, it indicates many wars among people, deaths and diseases, and the ruin of the lords of the faith and of greatness. If from the tenth, the high priests and elders among thekings will face difficulty.

«On the Configurations of the Sun and Jupiter.»

The conjunction of the Sun and Jupiter signifies wickedness among devotees and ascetics, elders, and virtuous men, a decline of faith, and grievous afflictions upon merchants — especially those who deal in goods that partake of the nature of Jupiter. If they are in sextile or trine, the ministries of the high priests will be powerful and they will introduce methods into their judgments. If in opposition, the wise will encounter wickedness from kings, while the kings themselves will experience rejoicing. If in square,

«On the Configurations of Jupiter and Venus.»

The conjunction of Jupiter and Venus signifies the chastity of women and the steadfastness of their thoughts toward their own husbands, the favorable disposition of affairs for the great men — especially in the cities governed by the sign of their conjunction — as well as abundance and joy. Likewise in the square of the same sign. If they are in sextile or trine, it signifies that the services of women will be honorable and they will be made chaste, along with the joy of entertainers, gladness of the wise and of those who share in the faith, and rain in its due season. If in the fourth-sign square, it signifies the arrival of many envoys between kings and the rejoicing of the lords of the faith. If in opposition, it signifies the disturbance of androgynes regarding the faith, the pleasure of entertainers, and rain in its season; if from the tenth sign, it signifies the beauty of women and the seeking by kings of goods of exchange, aromatics, perfumes, metallic wares, such as precious stones, pearls, and the like.

"On the Configurations of Jupiter and Mercury."

When Jupiter conjoins Mercury, it signifies a quest for wisdom among men, and a heating of human bodies — all the more so if the conjunction occurs during a time of heat. If it forms a sextile or trine, it signifies joy among scholars and grammarians, many encounters and debates (f. 227′) among the wise, and timely rainfall. If it forms a square from the 4th house, it signifies disturbances among the poor, the revelation of hidden matters, gladness among grammarians, a transformation of writings and readings, many messages, and abundant rain. If it is in opposition, it signifies conflicts among merchants over trade, commerce, and negotiation, as well as the return of envoys with joy among kings and magnates, and rain. If it forms a square from the 10th house, it signifies a quest among men for noble works and the execution of duties, especially from the houses of kings.

"On the Configurations of Jupiter and the Moon." >

When Jupiter conjoins the Moon, or forms a sextile or trine with her, it signifies that men devote themselves to the good works of the faith, and to the building of churches, bridges, and the like. If it forms a square or opposition from the 4th house, it signifies a quest for wisdom and understanding.

glory and honor of the monks, and of those who hold the faith, and the building of churches and oratories. But if from the 10th, it signifies the beauty of the services of the elders, and the greatness of the order of the high priests and magnates.

On the Configurations of Mars and the Sun. 5

When Mars conjoins the Sun, it signifies the slaying of thieves and the capture of brigands by the hands of kings. But if it forms a sextile or trine, it signifies the manifestation of kings and the power of their hand, and the movement of armies, good tidings before kings and magnates, the discernment of plots, wickedness, and conspiracies, the appearance of brigands on the roads, and rain in its season. But if it forms a square from the 4th, the 7th, or the 10th, it signifies the power of kings and magnates, deaths and sicknesses, and oppositions between kings and magnates, and many disturbances and contentions among them, turmoil in the world and injustice. It also signifies the death of a king or magnate of that region governed by the sign in which Mars is located, and the imprisonment of certain magnates of that region of the sign, and many deaths and sicknesses.

"On the Configurations of Venus and Mars."

Their conjunction indicates the fornication of women and the evil outcome of many of their affairs, as well as the corruption and destruction of the land of the Romans and of those who partake of Rumeli, and great wickedness. But if they are in sextile or trine, it indicates many unions between men and women, easy childbirth for women, joy among soldiers, deliberations between kings and their soldiers, and abundance of grain. If they are in square from the fourth house, it indicates much loose talk and fornication among women, a great spectacle among them, the death of women and infants, friendship between women and foreign men, the conduct of secret affairs, and moreover the death of a young king or child. The same is also indicated by the opposition. If from the tenth house, it indicates the circumstances of women to be more adverse than those of noble ladies, and a great spectacle among their kings.

"On the Configurations of Mars and Mercury."

The conjunction of Mars and Mercury indicates abundant production of roses and of chemistry and of the yaouglithou — that is, of hyacinth — and of stones and pearls and the like, but also harm and loss to the educated and and destruction of fruits. If they are in sextile or trine, it indicates many movements of soldiers and kings, and the exchange of envoys between kings, in friendship, as well as a meticulous investigation of affairs by the great men — particularly those conducted through fire and the like. If they are in square from the fourth house, it indicates the death of those who govern the climes of the zodiacal sign, and the death of a young child of a king, as well as much false speech and the seizure of certain persons among the great men, abundance of four-footed animals, the mustering of an army, the appearance of chariots (f. 928), few acts of war, and all men will love the experience of chariots. It also indicates great activity in the art of alchemy. If they are in opposition, there will be wickedness and disputes among the people, the killing of thieves and brigands, harm to the affairs of those who govern the clime of the zodiacal sign, the arrest of a certain official, and the death of a young child of a king. If from the tenth house, it indicates that kings and great men will seek out alchemy, as well as stones and pearls.

<About the formations of Areos and the Moon.>

When Mars conjoins the Moon, it portends among men many false words, effusions of blood, and widespread death. If it forms a sextile or trine, men will be averse to prudence yet inclined toward folly; there will also be beauty in the service of the great lords. If it squares from the 4th, it portends injustice of kings toward their neighbors. If from the 7th, it portends many wars and strife, much wickedness and tyranny among men. If from the 10th, it portends injustice of kings and of the army, and such arrogance that they will not heed any petition.

On the Conjunction of the Sun and Venus.

The conjunction of the Sun and Venus portends, for Kohstan — which is a region of the Turks — great harm, and among them wars and wickedness, a multitude of deaths among women and among entertainers, as well as rain, cold, and wind.

«On the Conjunction of the Sun and Mercury.>

When the Sun conjoins Mercury, it portends a multitude of secret labors among men, tending especially toward wisdom and knowledge; rain, thunder, and lightning at their hour, and dust; death, sickness, and loss to humble scribes and readers.

«On the Configurations of the Sun and Moon. >

When the Sun conjoins the Moon, it signifies the flight and concealment of men, and a multitude of secret affairs; but if it forms a trine or sextile from the 4th house, the servitude of the common people will come about with difficulty and will not be established in a single order, while the secret matters concerning kings will be revealed. If it forms a sextile or trine from the 7th, it signifies the revelation of secret affairs; if it is in opposition, it signifies many disputes among the common people; if from the 13th, the mysteries of kings will be revealed, and there will also be a multitude of falsehoods.

On the Configurations of Mercury and Venus. When Mercury conjoins or sextiles Venus, it signifies lies and many falsehoods, but joy for scholars and those who write literary works, - and nākhre and āpar (?), and a desire for the study of melody, and friendship among the great, as well as wind and rain in its due season.

«On the Configurations of Venus and the Moon.»

The conjunction of Venus and the Moon signifies social gatherings, theatrical performances, and many games, and the drawing of all people toward them, as well as a seeking of perfumes, flowers, and aromatics; if they are in sextile or trine, it signifies a seeking of the lyre and music of every kind and melody, and sojourns in flat and open places; if from the 4th or from the 10th, it signifies fear and loss for men; if in opposition, slanders, disputes, and much idle talk.

«On the Configurations of Mercury and the Moon. >

When Mercury conjoins the Moon, it signifies the pursuit of wisdom and the revelation of mysteries. If the Moon is in sextile or trine, and is in a favorable condition, people will seek wisdom on that same day. If the Moon is afflicted, they will do the opposite of wisdom. If it squares from the fourth, it signifies falsehoods, disputes, and arguments concerning philosophy. If it is in opposition and the Moon is well-dignified, it signifies disputes and contentions on behalf of justice and truth. If afflicted, it signifies arguments in service of falsehood and injustice. If from the tenth, and the Moon is (f. 2285) well-dignified, it signifies the apprehension of matters of faith and truth. If afflicted, it signifies the confirmation of falsehood and injustice.

Γ. 267. The Judgment of Aleim son of Isaac, containing something useful and demonstrating how, when questioned about the same matter, one thing and another came to pass, as he said, along with other useful matters of his.

While Albumasar was sitting and conversing with the son of Moses, Muchoumes, and Ali son of Ichie, astrologers, the son of Faroukhani Ises came to him, saying that he wished to take the ascendant of a man who had a case against him. Having cast the figure, the Ascendant was found to be Libra, the Sun in Virgo, Venus at the beginning of Scorpio, Saturn in Aquarius, and Mars in Leo. He then declared that the power of affliction and the opposition of the two malefic planets had been taken,  and that he would be defeated by his adversary. Albumasar presented this judgment to the astrologers seated with him, and they acknowledged that he had spoken truly.

After several days had passed, when Abū Maʿshar was again conversing with them, someone asked Abū Maʿshar about a man who was his adversary. Having cast a chart, he found Aries ascending and its lord Mars in Leo, in exact degree opposition to Saturn, Saturn being in Aquarius and Venus in Sagittarius. He said to the questioner: "You are about to fall into fear, timidity, and opposition, yet without harm — for he has been freed from danger." Those conversing with him declared that he spoke falsely; for since on the previous day's question he had judged that the lord of the querent would be defeated — because the lord of the Ascendant was found in the trine of the two malefics — how was it that in the present question he declared that the one in danger would be freed, especially given that Mars and  and Mars are in exact degree opposition to Saturn, the malefic lord? He replied that the winds had shifted and the opposition configuration had ceased, and when this became apparent, they understood that he had spoken well, knowing that art in its finest detail.He instructed them in this lesson: one must take heed and not judge that someone will be harmed if such configurations are found in horary questions and nativities — that is, when the latitudes have been calculated by us. If the latitude of such planets is found in one wind, declare that the person will suffer harm; but if the winds differ and one is southern while the other is northern, declare that there is danger of a kind, yet the person will be delivered from it. The same man said: if Saturn is found unafflicted and aspects from a favorable configuration, the good that is bestowed by it upon a person is immutable; this will hold especially and with particular force for his children and offspring throughout for many years. If Saturn is found holding dominion over the Ascendant, the hidden indication will be obscure; if Saturn and Mars remain in their own temperament, accompanying or configurating none of the benefics, they indicate no good.

Someone said to Abū Maʿshar himself: what am I now holding in my heart? He said to him: it concerns God. Since the ascending node was found at the Midheaven and <the> lord of the Ascendant is in conjunction with it, and the remaining stars in the cadent houses behold from sextile the lord of the Ascendant, and the degree of each was higher than every circle, I knew nothing else similar to appear except God, because the powers of God appear, yet He Himself not at all. If (?) asked by someone concerning a man who is abroad, the same one said: and the lord of the Ascendant is found in the 3rd or in the 8th, passing from sign to sign, and the Sun declining from the Midheaven into the 9th, and the Moon is found neither in an angle nor configured by any of the stars in an angle; he said that he has departed, without any explanation. Γ. 267. A chart engraved by the philosopher Eleutherios Zebelenos, useful for many purposes, and concerning the years of life of the querent and the events that will befall him during those years. 1.

Since in general questions the discussion of the years of life takes precedence, as the renowned Ptolemy and all the ancients declare, let us first examine the years of life as well. And since the Sun was found in the 8th place, and the Moon in the 6th, and simply both luminaries were found to have fallen cadent in the chart, we took Mars as the apheta according to the doctrine of the great Ptolemy, as the domicile lord of the Sun, and Mercury as the domicile lord of the Moon and as the hypsocrator of the Midheaven, who gives the mean years of his period: 40 years. And if we also take Venus as the apheta, as the lady of the Ascendant and as being placed at the Midheaven in her own triplicity and as the lady of the Sun and the Moon, she too gives the mean years of her period: 40 and 6/6 years. Nevertheless, the transits of Mars, of Venus, of the Sun, of the Moon, and of the Ascendant will reveal more precisely the quantity of the years of life of the lord of the question.Since, therefore, we took Mars as the apheta, we take Jupiter as the anareta, as the lord of the bound of Mars, and as forming a square aspect with it. And since 11 of its depression, at the 26th year, and it indicates the critical period (climacteric) for the querent; then the progression of the Moon reaches the square of Mars in the Zodiac, around the beginning of the 31st year — that is, near the middle period of Mars — and this too indicates a bodily climacteric for the querent, arising from heat, or from blood, or from iron, or from a blow and a strike. Since, then, various climacteric periods are found from the progressions, we say that if the querent survives the intermediate climacterics — namely those of the 32nd year, the 33rd, and the 36th — his life will endure up to and including the 45th year, reckoned from the day and hour of the question. And since the progression of the degree of the Ascendant reaches the opposition of Saturn (?) at the 46th year, this too is a further confirmation that the life of the querent will endure up to the 45th year.

Jupiter was found combust, and the method of the release is ineffective; nevertheless, from the progressions of Mars and Venus, we shall obtain a clearer determination of the years of life of the querent. We therefore advanced the progression of Mars to the left square of Saturn, and found it arriving at that square of Saturn in the 6th month of the 32nd year. This climacteric is adverse, because it also falls in the terms of Mars; it indicates illness from some rheumatic condition or from some disease affecting the ankles and the native's own feet, or from chills and fever. It also indicates loss and disruption in matters pertaining to divine and sacred communal affairs, though the climacteric has great support because the Sun trines the climacteric degree. Then the progression of Mars arrives at the opposition of the Moon toward the end of the 33rd year; and this climacteric is adverse because it falls near the midpoint of Mars's period, and it indicates illness from dysentery or from some pain arising about the bladder or the belly, from which burning fevers will also befall the querent.And one must observe these critical periods and give great attention to the body so as to purge it in preparation for receiving the aforementioned climacterics. After the progression of Mars, we also advanced the progression of Venus and found it arriving at the body of Mars in the 4th month of the 36th year; and this climacteric is adverse, because it falls near the midpoint of Mars's period. This climacteric indicates illness from burning fever, or from a plethora of blood, or from iron and cutting and cautery. Again we advanced the progression of Venus to the zodiacal square of the Sun and found it arriving thereat in the 6th month of the 45th year. And since this climacteric falls at the midpoint of Venus's period, the querent will not survive this climacteric, but will meet the end of life within it. Nevertheless, let us examine more precisely the years of life of the querent from the other significators as well.The progression of the Sun arrives at the body of Saturn in the 4th month of the 29th year, with Mars distributing, and it indicates a climacteric for the querent from chills and fever, or from some pain that will arise about the thighs and the groin and the middle parts of the body. Then again we advanced the progression of the Moon to the end of Libra, to the beginning of the Midheaven, and found it arriving from the terms of Mars to the terms of Venus (?) in the 8th month of the 23rd year. And this transition is adverse; for it indicates a bodily climacteric from heat. Then the progression of the Moon arrives at the degree of the 22 σῶμα] cf. v. 34 and p. 138, v. 15. 30 οὐχὶ περβήσεται cod.

These are the general judgments we have made concerning the years of life of the querent. Regarding the fortunate intermediate periods and the ones that follow, we speak again. The progression of the degree of the Ascendant reached the subdivision (firdaria) of Mercury toward the end of the 21st year, and it signified that the querent would be benefited by some learned and wise man, and that he would engage in scribal and intellectual occupations and would profit thereby. And prior to this he will receive livelihood and honor, and the aforementioned good things will endure up to and including the end of the 26th year and some months into the 27th year. And the querent will be greatly benefited and honored in those said years; perhaps also through the agency of some female person, the aforementioned good things will come to him, because Mercury, who is allotting, is placed in the 7th house, which is indicative of women. Then the progression of the Ascendant passes from the bounds of Mercury to the bounds of Jupiter at the beginning of the 27th year, and Jupiter allots 4 years and 8 months, making a total of 30 years and 8 months.And it is signified that in these 30 years the querent will be concerned and will meditate upon the salvation of the soul and upon the good things of the hereafter, and will incline toward renunciation, and will reflect upon death and engage in contemplation; and perhaps he will also be grieved on account of money. Then the progression of the Ascendant passes from the bounds of Jupiter to the bounds of Venus, and Venus allots another 5 years, making a total of 35 years and 5 months; and it is signified that in these years of the firdaria of Venus the querent will rejoice and will have bodily rest and a good life, and will have intercourse with a woman and be of good cheer. But within this firdaria of Venus, the progression of the Ascendant reaches the body of the ascending node around the end of the 35th year, and it indicates a bodily illness for the querent. 41 body] cf. p. 133, 22.

of the inquiry, arising from a flux or from some pain that will come upon the head. Then the progression of the Ascendant moves from the bounds of Venus into the bounds of Mars around the middle of the 36th year, and Mars distributes another 7 years and 9 months, making in all 46 years <sic>; and this indicates that during these times the body of the native of the inquiry will be sickly, and he will suffer from successive illnesses, especially from heat — yet since the progression falls into the zodiacal trine of Mars around the middle of the 37th year, the native of the inquiry will be benefited by some illustrious leader or soldier, or by some adversary. Then the progression of the Ascendant reaches the opposition of the circle around the end of the 46th year, and this indicates a critical period for the native of the inquiry arising from some rheumatic condition or from catarrh — a critical period which the native of the inquiry will not be able to escape, but in that very year he will receive the end of his life.

After the progression of the Ascendant, we also perform the progression of Venus. The progression of Venus thus reaches its own distribution — that is, into its own bounds — around the middle of the 24th year, and this indicates that the native of the inquiry will be benefited and will be united with a woman, and will be in good spirits, and will devote himself to care of the body and cleanliness and good living, and his honor and livelihood will receive increase. Then the progression of Venus reaches the zodiacal square of Mercury around the end of the 28th year, while Venus is distributing, and this indicates that at that time the native of the inquiry will be benefited and will carry out services for some eloquent and wise man, or will gain profit and benefit on account of certain literary and intellectual matters.Then the progression of Venus reaches the body of Mars around the end of the 35th year and the beginning of the 36th, and this indicates a critical period for the native of the inquiry arising from a surfeit of blood, or from heat, or from a blow and striking, or from iron. Such a critical period is exceedingly dangerous; and if he passes through it, his life will endure until the progression of Venus reaches the zodiacal square of the Sun — that is, around the end of the 44th year and the beginning of the 45th — a critical period which the native of the inquiry will not be able to escape. It is therefore indicated also from the progression of Venus that if he passes through the critical period in the 36th year, he will endure until the 45th year.

We again examined the course of Mars in greater detail, and found it occupying the left sextile of Venus toward the end of the 22nd year, indicating that the querent will benefit and his honor will increase and there will be added to his joy and his bodily care and well-being, and he will be united with a woman and will benefit and gain profit on account of some distinguished female person. Then the course of Mars reaches the zodiacal square of Jupiter in the 9th month of the 25th year, and it indicates benefit to the querent and gain and p of honor from an inheritance 5 that has accrued, or from some distinguished man participating in divine and sacred matters, that is, an archbishop or a monk. Then the course of Mars reaches the zodiacal square of Saturn toward the middle of the 32nd year; at the same time it also reaches the zodiacal trine of the Sun, and at that time a critical period is indicated for him on account of certain divine 10 and sacred matters, in which critical period he will also benefit from a great person, or even from the king himself. Then the course of Mars reaches the opposition of the Moon toward the end of the 33rd year. And such a critical period is adverse, because there is no support to be had from anywhere. We say therefore that if he passes through this critical period, 15 that is, the one at the end of the 33rd year and the remaining ones, namely the one in the 36th year and the 37th, his life will endure until the 45th year. A. O.

F. 316. On Inceptions. Various Opinions of the Wise.

In every inception, it is necessary to guard against the first and eighth hours of the two days of the week, namely Tuesday and Saturday, because the malefic stars, Mars and Saturn, hold sway and govern during those hours of those days — Mars on Tuesday and Saturn on Saturday.

Munes says: every star that is at the beginning of a sign is weak with respect to that sign up to the first degrees; for a star departs from an angle only when it departs by 15 degrees, since then it is no longer at the angle but among the following degrees. If the star is within 15 degrees, it is at the angle; but if it is beyond 15 degrees, it has no power at the angle.

The wise Embrenius said: if a benefic planet[1] occupies the ascendant in the first third of the horoscope, that is, the first decan, it is more productive of results and more swift toward good. He also said this: when the ascendant is at the tenth degree of the sign, the benefic must be at the eleventh degree, so that shortly after the ascending degree rises, the benefic may also rise — and this is the best of all conditions for the ascendant to be beneficially influenced.

The ancients say: when a star is in the ascendant, within three degrees toward the following degrees, it has great power in the ascendant.

Λέγει ὁ σοφώτατος Σέχλ[2] ὅτι ἐὰν ὁ δηλῶν τὴν ἐρώτησιν ἀστὴρ εὑρεθῇ ἐν τῇ λ' μοίρᾳ τοῦ ζῳδίου, ἐν τῷ μετ' αὐτὸν ζῳδίῳ ἐστὶ ἡ 10 δύναμις αὐτοῦ· εἰ δὲ ἐν τῇ κθ' μοίρᾳ, ἐν ἐκείνῳ τῷ ζωδίῳ ὑπάρχει ἡ δύναμις αὐτοῦ, ἐπειδὴ ἡ δύναμις τοῦ ἀστέρος ἐν τρισὶ μοίραις θεωρεῖται, ἐν ᾗ τέ ἐστι καὶ τῇ πρὸ αὐτῆς καὶ τῇ μετ' αὐτῆς. — Λέγει δὲ καὶ τοῦτο· ὅτι ἡ σωματικὴ συναφὴ μεγαλωτέραν δύναμιν ἔχει τῶν διὰ τῶν ἀκτίνων σχημάτων· τὸ μὲν γὰρ σῶμα φθείρει τὴν ἀκτῖνα, ἡ δὲ ἀκτὶς τὸ 15 σῶμα οὐ φθείρει. ὁ κύριος δὲ συσχηματισμὸς τῶν ἀστέρων λέγεται ὅτε ἀπέχει ὁ ἑλαφρὸς τοῦ βαρέως μοίρας τρεῖς· τότε γὰρ καὶ συσχηματίζει αὐτόν. λέγεται δὲ ἀπορρεῖν τούτου, ὅτε παρέλθῃ διάστημα ἑνὸς ζωδίου· ἡ δέ γε ἀπόρροια τῆς διαμέτρου, μιᾶς μοίρας, ἡ δέ γε σύνοδος καὶ ἡ ἐξ αὐτῆς ἀπόρροια ἐπικρατεῖ καὶ λέγεται συνοδεύειν, ὅτε ἐντὸς 20 τῆς ὡρισμένης αὐτῶν τῶν ἀστέρων εἰσὶν ἀκτῖνος. πᾶς οὖν ἀστὴρ ὁ ὢν ἐν τῇ ἀρχῇ τοῦ ζῳδίου ἥττων τῶν ε' μοιρῶν ἀσθενής ἐστι πρὸς τὸ ζῴδιον, ἐπεὶ καὶ ἀπὸ τοῦ κέντρου ὁ ἀστὴρ τότε ἀποκλίνει, ὅτε ἀπέχει ἐπέκεινα τῶν ε' μοιρῶν. ὁ ἀστὴρ ὅταν ἐπαναφέρηται κέντρῳ ἐλάττων τῶν ιε' μοιρῶν, ἐν τῷ κέντρῳ ἐστίν, εἰ δ' ὑπερβαίνει τὰς ιε', δύναμιν ἐπὶ 25 τῷ κέντρῳ οὐκ ἔχει. — Ὅτε μέλλουσι συνοδεῦσαι νυκτὶ δύο ἀστέρες καὶ ὑπάρχει ὁ μὲν εἷς βόρειος, ὁ δὲ ἕτερος νότιος, μέλλουσι δὲ οὗτοι παρὰ ὥραν δευτέραν ἢ τετάρτην ἀνελθεῖν τῆς νυκτὸς ἀπὸ τῆς ἀνατολῆς καὶ ὑπάρχει ὁ μὲν βόρειος ἐν η' μοίρᾳ τοῦ ζῳδίου, ὁ δὲ νότιος ἐν ς'· καὶ ἦν δεὸν ἀπὸ τῶν μοιρῶν φανῆναι πρότερον τὸν νότιον καὶ οὕτως τὸν 30 βόρειον· ὁ βόρειος πρότερον φανήσεται καὶ οὕτως ὁ νότιος. ἐν δὲ τῇ δύσει αὐτῶν τὸ ἀνάπαλιν γίνεται· ὁ νότιος πρότερον δύνει καὶ οὕτως ὁ βόρειος, κἂν δεῖ πρότερον δύναι τὸν βόρειον ἀπὸ τῆς τῶν μοιρῶν τάξεως. — Ἐάν τις δουλείας ἄρξηται τῆς Σελήνης οὔσης ἐν κέντρῳ καὶ ὑπὸ κακοποιῶν βλαπτομένης, ἀποφαίνει <?> μὴ τελεσφορῆσαι τὴν 35 δουλείαν ἐκείνην· εἰ δὲ βούλῃ γνῶναι πότε ἀνατραπήσεται ἵδε τὸν κακοποιὸν τὸν βλάπτοντα τὴν Σελήνην πότε ἐπεμβαίνῃ τῇ μονῇ τῆς Σελήνης· τηνικαῦτα γὰρ ἀνατραπήσεται. — Ἐπὶ πάσης καταρχῆς δεῖ εἶναι τὴν Σελήνην ἐν τοῖς ὀρθοῖς ζῳδίοις τοῖς ἀπὸ Καρκίνου ἕως Τοξότου ὁρῶσα<ν> τὸν Δία ἢ τὴν Ἀφροδίτην ταχυδρομοῦντας καὶ

min. But if it is within 10 degrees of the 3rd degree from the very degree of the Ascendant, it has second power; if within 15 degrees, it has third power with respect to the Ascendant; but if beyond 15 degrees, it has no power with respect to the Ascendant.

5 Albumasar says that some of the ancients claim that when Saturn and Mars are in conjunction, they produce good fortune; for the one is cold and the other hot, and between them a balance of temperament arises.

The most wise Sechi says that if the star signifying the question is found in the 30th degree of a Sign, its power lies in the Sign following it; but if in the 29th degree, its power resides in that same Sign, since the power of a star is observed within three degrees — the degree in which it is located, the one before it, and the one after it. — He also says this: that bodily conjunction has greater power than aspects formed by rays; for the body destroys the ray, whereas the ray does not destroy the body. The proper configuration of stars is said to occur when the lighter planet is three degrees away from the heavier; for it is then that it aspects it. It is said to separate from it when the interval of one Sign has passed; and the separation from an opposition is of one degree, while a conjunction and the separation arising from it prevail — and a star is said to be in conjunction when they are within the defined rays of the stars themselves. Thus every star that is in the beginning of a Sign, less than 5 degrees, is weak with respect to that Sign, since the star declines from the angle when it is more than 5 degrees away. When a star rises toward an angle and is less than 15 degrees from it, it is in the angle; but if it exceeds 15 degrees, it has no power at the angle.— When two stars are about to conjoin by night, one being northern and the other southern, and these are about to rise from the east at the second or fourth hour of the night, and the northern one is in the 8th degree of the Sign while the southern is in the 6th; and it would be expected from the degrees that the southern one should appear first and then the northern — in fact the northern will appear first and then the southern. At their setting, the reverse occurs: the southern sets first and then the northern, even though the order of the degrees would require the northern to set first. — If someone begins a task while the Moon is in an angle and afflicted by malefics, this indicates that the undertaking will not be brought to completion; and if you wish to know when it will be overturned, observe when the malefic afflicting the Moon enters the Moon's station — for it is at that time that it will be overturned. — For every inception it is necessary for the Moon to be in the right Signs from Cancer through Sagittarius, beholding Jupiter or Venus moving swiftly, and 7 εὐκρασίαν cod. 10 εἰ δὲ cod.

being oriental; for then it will accomplish such an inception more swiftly and will have a favorable outcome; but if it is in an oblique sign and afflicted, [it signifies] deficiencies and humiliations. — Concerning the time of the outcome, one must observe the stars that are the causative agents; for those that are oriental and angular, especially in the Ascendant or the Midheaven, indicate days; those that are oriental and succedent, months; those that are occidental and succedent, years.

The ancients say that for every inception Jupiter must be in the Ascendant, Venus in the 11th, the ascending node in the 2nd, Mars in the 5th, the Moon in the 3rd, and the Sun in the 9th. But if you are unable to find them thus, and you find more than two of them so placed, the good becomes stronger than the evil. — The void of course Moon in inceptions signifies futile action; the Moon is understood to be void of course in inceptions when, in the sign in which it is located, it does not apply to any of the benefics either by body or by aspect, nor in the next following sign. — In every inception the Sun must not be in the sign in which, during that very year, an eclipse has occurred or will occur; likewise regarding the Moon. — Every malefic planet operating in the domicile or exaltation of the Sun will take on the power of a benefic; the Ascendant indicates present matters, the Midheaven those coming to pass shortly, the Descendant those that will occur slowly, and the Imum Coeli the outcomes of affairs. EXCERPTA EX CODICE 6 (Marc. cccxxiv)

Dodecaeteridos Chaldaicae formae duae.

1. In cod. Parisino 2420 a. 1550 a Christoph. Auero scripto (P) fol. 205ᵛ-209ʳ dodecaeteris quaedam s. cyclus duodecim annorum describitur, in quo " tempestates frugumque proventus ac sterilitates, item morbi salubritatesque circumire " ita feruntur, ut dubitari non possit, quin maior ille annus " Chaldaicus " a Censorino (De die nat. 18, 7) memoratus explicetur. Singuli anni nomen acceperunt a signis Zodiaci : primus annus Arietis, secundus Tauri, ultimus Piscium vocatur [1]. Quem textum in codice Parisino fol. 209ʳ-210ʳ sequitur alter, quo eaedem res sed diversum in modum et multo brevius atque neglegentius tractantur. Quamquam ne prius quidem capitulum integrum exstare, sed excerptum atque nonnusquam mutilatum esse primo obtutu apparet. Haec duo capitula in unum redacta sunt in cod. Marciano 324 saec. XIV fol. 89ᵛ-91ᵛ : huius enim codicis capitulum ρκδ' ita contaminatum est, ut sex anni priores secundum priorem dodecaeterida, ceteri secundum alteram describerentur. Quod casu factum esse negaverim tot locis a scriptore codicis Marciani manifesto interpolatis immutatis consulto omissis, ut codicis Parisini quamvis recentioris lectionem unam fere genuinam esse censeam.

2. Priorem atque pleniorem dodecaeterida a. 996 p. Chr. scriptam esse ipse titulus probare videtur. Sed ut archetypus codicum nostrorum hoc tempore factus est, ita tractatus ipse mille fere annis antiquior esse debet. Nam ut cetera taceam, mensium nomina quaedam volgaribus adiuncta Imperatoris Augusti aetatem prae se ferunt : cum Ianuario enim comparatur Ὀκτάβαιος, cum Martio Νερώναιος (Νηρώναιος codd.), cum Iunio Ἀγχίσαιος (Ἀχύσαιος s. Ἐχίσιος codd.), cum Iulio Ῥωμαῖος, cum Octobri Σεβαστός, cum Novembri Ἀγρίππαιος, cum Decembri Λίβαιος. Iam vides mensium nomina ab Augusto ipso, ab Agrippa, a Livia et Octavia, a Nerone quodam, ab Anchisa progenitore, denique ab Urbe Roma petita esse. Atque hi fasti quo loco et quo tempore in honorem domus Augustanae instituti sint, Hermanni Useneri viri summi opusculo quodam ante hos viginti annos scripto neque dum edito, quod mihi benignissime permisit, edoctus sum. EXCERPTS FROM CODEX 6 (MARC. CCCXXIV)

Two Forms of the Chaldean Dodecaeteris.

1. In Codex Parisinus 2420, written in 1550 by Christoph. Auerus (P), fol. 205–209, a certain dodecaeteris, or cycle of twelve years, is described, in which tempests, the yields and failures of crops, as well as diseases and periods of health, are said to recur in succession — in such a way that there can be no doubt that the greater "Chaldean" year mentioned by Censorinus (De die nat. 18, 7) is here being explained. Each individual year takes its name from a sign of the Zodiac: the first year is called that of Aries, the second that of Taurus, and the last that of Pisces.[1] In the Codex Parisinus, this text is followed on fol. 209–210 by another, in which the same subjects are treated in a different manner, much more briefly and carelessly. Yet it is evident at first glance that not even the first chapter survives intact, but that it is an excerpt, and in some places mutilated. These two chapters have been combined into one in Codex Marcianus 324, 14th century, fol. 89–91: for the chapter πδ' of this codex is so contaminated that the first six years are described according to the first dodecaeteris, and the remaining years according to the second. I would deny that this came about by chance, given the many passages that are manifestly interpolated, altered, or deliberately omitted by the scribe of the Codex Marcianus — so much so that I consider the readings of the Codex Parisinus, though more recent, to be in nearly every case the genuine ones.

2. The title itself seems to prove that the earlier and more complete dodecaeteris was written in A.D. 996. But while the archetype of our codices was made at that time, the treatise itself must be nearly a thousand years older. For, to say nothing of other evidence, certain month names appended to the common ones bear the hallmark of the age of the Emperor Augustus: for compared with January is 'Οκτάβαιος, with March Νερύναιος (Νηρώναιος in the codices), with June Ἀγχίσαιος (Ἀχύσαιος or Ἐχίσιος in the codices), with July Ῥωμαῖος, with October Σεβαστός, with November Ἀγρίππαιος, with December Λιβαῖος. You can see at once that these month names are derived from Augustus himself, from Agrippa, from Livia and Octavia, from a certain Nero, from the ancestor Anchises, and finally from the city of Rome itself. As for the place and time at which these calendrical observances were instituted in honor of the Augustan house, I was informed by a certain short work written some twenty years ago but not yet published by that most eminent scholar HERMANN USENER, who most generously permitted me to use it. The same enim mensium nomina in Libro glossarum ex " lingua Ellenorum " ita habentur (v. Goetzii Thesaurum Glossarum, fasc. 2, p. 692) :

1 The Zoroastrian dodecaeteris of Jupiter (Geop. I, 12) was established in the same manner, and we shall compare it with ours below in the notes at various points.

I. Sabastos (Σεβαστός) = Ianuarius.
II. Agripeos (Ἀγρίππειος) = Februarius.
III. Libenos (Λιβίδειος Us., Λίβειος? Goetz) = Martius.
IV. Octteos (Ὀκτάϊος Us., Ὀκτάβειος Goetz) = Aprilis.
V. Mensis quintus deest : quem in Iuliae honorem Ἰούλιον nominatum esse Usener l. l. probavit [1].
VI. Naroneos (Νερώνειος) = Iunius.
VII. Druseos (Δρούσειος) = Iulius.
VIII. Aphrodiseos (Ἀφροδίσιος) = Augustus.
IX. Anchiseos (Ἀγχίσειος) = September.
X. Pomeos (Ῥωμαῖος) = October.
XI. Eneades (Αἰνεάδειος) = November.
XII. Capetoleos (Καπετώλιος) = December.

Itaque in honorem Augusti, Agrippae, Liviae, Octaviae, Iuliae, Neronis et Drusi privignorum Augusti, deinde Veneris et Anchisae, deae Romae, Aeneae, Capitolii hi menses nominati sunt, Agrippa iam tribunicia potestate ornato, Gaio autem et Lucio Caesaribus nondum ab Augusto adoptatis : scilicet a. 18-17 a. Chr. Atque " Ellenos " quosdam haec mensium nomina instituisse libro glossarum discimus : quos Syromacedones atque imprimis Antiochenos fuisse Usener statuit, cui haec omnia debemus.

3. Mensium nomina in dodecaeteride nostra eadem esse atque in libro glossarum apparet. Neque tamen eadem temporis spatia designant : exempli gratia Σεβαστὸς dodecaeteridos non Ianuario sed Octobri aequatur. Priusquam autem mensium ordo in dodecaeteride adhibitus explicetur, quae de singulis anni temporibus codices tradant conferemus.

I. Sementis (σπόρος).

Annis Arietis et Tauri : ἀπὸ μηνὸς Νοεμβρίου καὶ Ἀγριππαίου.
Anno Sagittarii : ἀπὸ μηνὸς Ἀπελλαίου (Ἀπηλές cod.) καὶ Νοεμβρίου καὶ Ἀγριππαίου.
Annis Leonis et Virginis : ἀπὸ μηνὸς Δεκεμβρίου καὶ Λιβαίου.

II. Solstitium brumale (τροπαὶ χειμεριναί).

Anno Cancri : τῇ πρώτη (sic) καλανδῶν Ἰαννουαρίων Λιβαίου κδ'.
Anno Leonis : τῇ πρὸ η' καλανδῶν Ἰαννουαρίων (= 25 dec.) Λιβαίου κδ'.
Anno Librae : τῇ πρὸ ἓξ καλανδῶν Ἰαννουαρίων (= 27 dec.) Λιβαίου κγ'.
Anno Scorpionis : τῇ πρὸ ὀγδόη (sic) καλανδῶν Ἰαννουαρίων (= 25 dec.) Λιβαίου κη'.
Anno Capricorni : τῇ πρὸ η' καλανδῶν Ἰαννουαρίων (= 25 dec.).

[1] Cf. Thes. gloss. l. s. l. : " Maius deest ; aut Iuliam aut Caesarem respiciendum fuisse Ruehl putat ".

month names are found in the Liber glossarum ex *lingua Ellenorum, as follows (see Goetz's Thesaurus Glossarum, fasc. 2, p. 692):

I. Sabastos (Σεβαστός)	= January.
II. Agripeos	= February.
III. Libenos (^ißidelog Us., Alßeloç Goetz)	Martius.
IV. Octteos (Us., Octavius Goetz)	= April.

V. The fifth month is missing: Usener (loc. cit.) has demonstrated that it was named 'Ιούλιον in honor of Julia[1].

VI. Naroneos (Ναρωνείος)	= June.
VII. Druseos (Δρούσειος)	= July.
VIII. Aphrodiseos (Ἀφροδίσιος)	August.
IX. Anchiseos (Ἀγχίσειος)	September.
X. Pomeos (Ῥωμαῖος)	October.
XI. Eneades (Ἀνεάδειος)	November.
XII. Capetoleos (Καπετώλιος)	December.

Thus, in honor of Augustus, Agrippa, Livia, Octavia, Julia, Nero and Drusus — stepsons of Augustus — and thereafter of Venus and Anchises, the goddess Roma, Aeneas, and the Capitolium, these months were named, at a time when Agrippa had already been honored with tribunician power, but when Gaius and Lucius Caesar had not yet been adopted by Augustus: that is, in the year 18–17 B.C. We also learn from a glossary that certain Greeks instituted these month names; Usener, to whom we owe all of this, determined that these were Syro-Macedonians, and chiefly Antiochenes.

3. The month names in our dodecaeteris are the same as those in the glossary, as is apparent. Yet they do not designate the same periods of time: for example, Sebastos in the dodecaeteris corresponds not to January but to October. Before explaining the order of months as employed in the dodecaeteris, however, we shall compare what the codices transmit concerning the individual seasons of the year.

I. Sowing season (σπόρος).

In the years of Aries and Taurus: from the month of November and Agrippaeus.

In the year of Sagittarius: from the month of Apellaeus (cod. Απηλές) and November and Agrippaeus.

In the years of Leo and Virgo: from the month of December and Libus.

II. Winter solstice (τροπαὶ χειμεριναί).

In the year of Cancer: on the first (sic) of the Kalends of January, Libra 24°.

Anno Leonis: on the 8th day before the Kalends of January (= 25 Dec.) Libra 24°.

Anno Librae: on the 6th day before the Kalends of January (= 27 Dec.) Libra 23°.

Anno Scorpionis: on the 8th (sic) day before the Kalends of January (= 25 Dec.) Libaios 28th.

Anno Capricorni: on the 8th day before the Kalends of January (= 25 Dec.).

1 Cf. Thes. gloss. 1. s. 1.: "Maius is missing; Ruehl thinks it should refer either to Julia or to Caesar ".

Multa in his menda librariorum oscitatione orta sunt: auctorem tamen Caesaris potissimum rationem secutum brumam a. d. VIII kal. Ian., qui est Λιβαίου dies XXIV, posuisse confidenter statuimus. Quamobrem in anno Cancri ex πρώτη correximus πρὸ η' et in anno Scorpionis pro κη' restituimus κδ'. Sed num in anni Librae descriptione τῇ πρὸ ς' καλανδῶν Ἰαννουαρίων (quo die Eudoxo solstitium brumale erat) recte traditum sit, quaeritur. Cum autem Clodium et Columellam passim variorum Graecorum sententias inter se pugnantes conflasse videamus, idem dodecaeteridos auctorem facere potuisse nemo negabit. Ac ne hoc quidem satis intellegimus, num aequinoctia atque solstitia aliis annis alio tempore fieri sibi persuaserit auctor. Hoc sane certissimum est in anno Librae Λιβαίου κγ' librarium falso scripsisse, cum Λιβαίου dies XXIV idem sit ac dies XXV mensis Decembris. Igitur et τῇ πρὸ ς' καλανδῶν Ἰανν. servavimus et Λιβαίου κς' restituimus.

III. Hiems media (χειμῶν μέσος).

Anno Arietis : τῇ πρὸ ε' καλανδῶν Φεβρουαρίων (= 28 Ian.) <...> κζ'.
Anno Tauri : <τῇ> πρὸ ε' καλανδῶν Φεβρουαρίων (= 28 Ian.).
Anno Scorpionis : τῇ πρὸ ε' καλανδῶν Φεβρουαρίων (= 28 Ian.) Ὀκταβαίου κζ'.
Anno Sagittarii : τῇ πρὸ ε' καλανδῶν Φεβρουαρίων (= 28 Ian.).

Hiemem mediam, quae Columellae et Clodio 4 Ian., Eudoxo 21 Ian. erat, dubium non est quin auctor dodecaeteridos a. d. V Kal. Febr. s. Ὀκταβαίου die XXVII esse censuerit.

IV. Aequinoctium vernum (ἐαρινὴ ἰσημερία).

Anno Arietis : τῇ πρὸ ε' καλανδῶν Ἀπριλλίων (= 28 Mart.).
Anno Tauri (siquidem recte verba ἕως τῆς ἐαρινῆς ἰσημερίας supplevi) : τῇ πρὸ ε' καλανδῶν Ἀπριλλίων (= 28 Mart.) Νηρωναίου λη'.
Anno Cancri (si recte ἰσημερίαν scripsi pro ἡμέραν) : τῇ πρὸ θ' καλανδῶν Ἀπριλλίων (= 24 Mart.) Νηρωναίου κγ' (P; κδ' M).
Anno Leonis : τῇ πρὸ θ' καλανδῶν Ἀπριλλίων (= 24 Mart.) Νηρωναίου κγ'.

Iterum et a. d. IX Kal. April. et a. d. V aequinoctium vernum, quod Eudoxo erat a. d. V Kal. Apr., Caesari a. d. VIII, Clodio a. d. IX necnon a. d. VI, auctor ipse posuisse videtur. Igitur Νερωναίου κζ' pro λη' restituere satis habuimus.

V. Vergiliarum exortus (Πλειάδος ἀνατολή).

Anno Arietis : τῇ πρὸ ε' καλανδῶν Μαίων (= 27 April.) <...> κε'.

Ortum matutinum verum (non apparentem s. quem hodie dicunt " heliacum „) auctor significat : cf. Columellam (X Kal. Maias Vergiliae cum sole oriuntur) et Idelerum (Ueber den astronom. Theil der Fasti des Ovid, Abh. d. Berl. Akad. 1822/23 p. 152). Sed num recte numeri traditi sint, infra videbimus.

VI. Solstitium aestivum (τροπαὶ θεριναί).

Anno Cancri (si recte verba transposui) : τῇ κε' (sic P; τῇ πρὸ κε' M) καλανδῶν Ἰουνίων (M : εἰσυνίων P) Ἀχυσαίου κς'.

Many errors in these passages arose from the carelessness of copyists; yet we confidently conclude that the author, following Caesar's reckoning above all, placed the winter solstice on the 8th day before the Kalends of January, which is the 24th day of Libaios. For this reason, in the year of Cancer we corrected ἐρτN to πρὸ η', and in the year of Scorpio we restored κδ' in place of κη'. But whether in the description of the year of Libra the reading τῇ πρὸ ς' καλανδῶν Ἰαννουαρίων (on which day Eudoxus placed the winter solstice) has been correctly transmitted remains in question. Since, however, we see that Clodius and Columella have in many places conflated the mutually contradictory opinions of various Greek authorities, no one will deny that the author of the dodecaeteris could have done the same. Nor do we sufficiently understand whether the author was persuaded that equinoxes and solstices occurred at different times in different years. One thing at least is entirely certain: in the year of Libra, the copyist wrongly wrote Libaios 23rd, since the 24th day of Libaios is the same as the 25th day of December. Therefore we have retained τῇ πρὸ ς' καλανδῶν Ἰαν. and restored Libaios 26th.

III. Midwinter (Χειμ ῶν μέσος).

Year of the Aries : n on the 5th day before the Kalends of February (= 28 Jan.) <> κτ' •

Year of the Taurus : <on the 5th day before the Kalends of February (= 28 Jan.).

Anno Scorpionis: τῇ πρὸ ε' καλανδῶν Φεβρουαρίων (= 28 Jan.) Octavianus' 27th day.

Anno Sagittarii: τῇ πρὸ ε' καλανδῶν Φεβρουαρίων (= 28 Jan.).

There is no doubt that the author of the dodecaeteris placed mid-winter, which fell on 4 Jan. for Columella and Clodius and on 21 Jan. for Eudoxus, on a. d. V Kal. Febr., i.e., the 27th day of Octavianus.

IV. The Vernal Equinox (ἐαρινὴ ἰσημερία).

Anno Arietis: τῇ πρὸ ε' καλανδῶν Ἀπριλλίων (= 28 March).

Anno Tauri (if indeed I have correctly supplied the words ἕως τῆς ἐαρινῆς ἰσημερίας): τῇ πρὸ ε' καλανδῶν Ἀπριλλίων (= 28 March), Neronianus' 38th day. Anno Cancri (if I have correctly written ἰσημερίαν in place of ἡμέραν): τῇ πρὸ θ' καλανδῶν Ἀπριλλίων (= 24 March), Neronianus' 23rd day (P; 24th day M).

Anno Leonis: τῇ πρὸ θ' καλανδῶν Ἀπριλλίων (= 24 March), Neronianus' 23rd day.

The vernal equinox appears to have been placed by the author himself on both a. d. IX Kal. April. and a. d. V Kal. April. — the equinox being a. d. V Kal. Apr. according to Eudoxus, a. d. VIII according to Caesar, and a. d. IX as well as a. d. VI according to Clodius. It therefore sufficed for us to restore Neronianus' 27th day in place of the 28th.

V. The Rising of the Pleiades (Πλειάδος ἀνατολή).

Anno Arietis: τῇ πρὸ ε' καλανδῶν Μαΐων (= 27 April) <...> 25th day.

The author indicates the true morning rising (not the apparent, or what is today called the "heliacal" rising): cf. Columella (X Kal. Maias, the Pleiades rise with the sun) and Ideler (Ueber den astronom. Theil der Fasti des Ovid, Abh. d. Berl. Akad. 1822/23 p. 152). But whether the transmitted numbers are correct, we shall examine below.

VI. Summer Solstice (τροπαὶ θεριναί).

In the year of Cancer (if I have correctly transposed the words): τῇ κε' (thus P; τῇ πρὸ κε' M) καλανδῶν Ἰουνίων (M : εἰσυνίων P) Ἀχυσαίου κς'.

Anno Librae: τῇ πρὸ η' καλανδῶν 'Ιουλίων (= 24 Iun.) 'Εχισίου ... (numerus deest).
Anno Sagittarii: τῇ πρὸ ς' καλανδῶν 'Ιουλίων (= 26 Iun.).
Anno Capricorni: τῇ πρὸ η' καλανδῶν Ιουλίων (= 24 Iun.).

Caesari solstitium a. d. VIII Kal. Iul., Callippo a. d. VI: Columellae autem a. d. VIII, VII, VI. Identidem utramque rationem dodecaeteridos quoque auctor secutus esse videtur: neque quidquam emendare ausi sumus, nisi quod in descriptione anni Cancri 'Ιουλίων pro 'Ιουνίων restituimus et ineptum numerum κε' asterisco notavimus.

VII. Caniculae exortus (Κυνὸς ἀνατολή).

Anno Geminorum: τῇ πρὸ (πρὸς P) ι' καλανδῶν Αὐγούστων (= 23 Iul.) 'Ρωμαίων (sic) κβ'.
Anno Virginis: πρὸ δὲ (sic) καλανδῶν Αὐγούστου κατὰ 'Ρωμαίους (sic) κβ'.
Anno Librae: πρὸ ι' καλανδῶν Αὐγούστων 'Ρωμαίων (sic) κβ'.
Anno Sagittarii: πρὸ ι' καλανδῶν Αὐγούστων.

Eundem diem scilicet a. d. X Kal. Aug., qui est mensis "'Ρωμαίου" dies XXII, ubique significari apparet. Ergo in anno Virginis δὲ in ι' correximus. Ceterum eodem die Clodio canicula exoritur: Eudoxo et Euctemoni pridie.

VIII. Arcturi occasus ('Αρκτούρου δύσις).

Anno Librae: τῇ πρὸ ε' νωνῶν (νομῶν cod.) 'Οκτωβρίου (= 3 Oct.) Σεβαστοῦ ι'.

Arcturi occasum vespertinum mense Octobri non ineunte sed paene iam finito fieri et veteres ad unum omnes viderunt et Ideler (Ueber den Kalender des Ptolemaeus, Abh. d. Berl. Akad. Philos. Cl. 1816-17, p. 194) calculo affirmavit. Qua in re auctor errasse videtur. Sed praeterea numeros dierum male inter se consentire infra probabimus.

4. Atque haec sunt quae de singulis anni temporibus in dodecaeteride maiore feruntur. Iam videamus quinam mensium in honorem domus Augustanae institutorum ordo atque ratio fuerit. Atque fieri non potuisse quin mensis ipsi Augusto dedicatus agmen duceret, non est qui neget. Itaque primum ab Octobri, id est aequinoctio auctumnali Syromacedones anni initium sumere pro vetere consuetudine perrexerunt [1]; deinde formam anni ita anno Iuliano adaequasse, ut primum mensem i. e. Σεβαστὸν cum Ianuario primo Romanorum mense componerent ceterosque deinceps, libro glossarum docemur. Atque in dodecaeteride nostra cum Σεβαστός Octobri, 'Αγρίππαιος Novembri, Λίβαιος Decembri, 'Οκτάβαιος Ianuario, Νερώναιος Martio, 'Αγχίσαιος Iunio, 'Ρωμαῖος Iulio similis esse dicatur,

[1] Idem in Asia Minore Augusto Imperatore factum est: cf. Mommsen, Mitth. d. athen. Instituts 1899, p. 287: "Ueberall geht mit der principiellen Ausgleichung die Schonung der alten Formen und Benennungen Hand in Hand: das Ianuar-Neujahr und die römischen Monatsnamen bleiben dem Osten fern, aber die Principien des festen Sonnenjahrs und des Schalttages werden gleichmässig durchgefuehrt."

In the year of Libra: τῇ πρὸ η' καλανδῶν Ἰουλίων (= 24 Jun.) Ἐχισίου ... (number missing).

In the year of Sagittarius: τῇ πρὸ ς' καλανδῶν Ἰουλίων (= 26 Jun.).

In the year of Capricorn: τῇ πρὸ η' καλανδῶν Ἰουλίων (= 24 Jun.).

For Caesar the solstice falls on a. d. VIII Kal. Iul., for Callippus on a. d. VI; for Columella, however, on a. d. VIII, VII, and VI. It appears that the author likewise followed both reckonings of the dodecaeteris alternately: and we have not ventured to emend anything, except that in the description of the year of Cancer we have restored Ἰουλίων in place of Ἰουνίων and marked the absurd number κε' with an asterisk.

VII. Rising of the Dog Star (Κυνὸς ἀνατολή).

In the year of Gemini: τῇ πρό (πρὸς P) ι' καλανδῶν Αὐγούστων (= 23 Jul.) Ῥωσμαίων (sic) κβ'.

In the year of Virgo: the 22nd (day) before the Kalends of August according to the Romans.

In the year of Libra: the 10th (day) before the Kalends of August of the Romans, (day) 22.

In the year of Sagittarius: the 10th (day) before the Kalends of August.

It is evident that the same day, namely a. d. X Kal. Aug., which is the 22nd day of the Roman month, is indicated throughout. Therefore in the Year of Virgo we corrected δὲ to ι'. Furthermore, on the same day the Dog Star rises for Clodius; for Eudoxus and Euctemon, on the day before.

VIII. Setting of Arcturus (Ἀρκτούρου δύσις).

In the year of Libra: τῇ πρὸ ε' νωνῶν (νομῶν cod.) Ὀκτωβρίου (— 3 Oct.) Σεβαστοῦ ι'.

The evening setting of Arcturus in October, not at the beginning but near the very end of the month, was observed unanimously by all the ancient authorities, and Ideler (Ueber den Kalender des Ptolemaeus, Abh. d. Berl. Akad. Philos. Cl. 1816–17, p. 194) confirmed this by calculation. In this matter the author appears to have erred. Furthermore, we shall demonstrate below that the day numbers are mutually inconsistent.

4. These, then, are the matters transmitted in the greater dodecaeteris concerning the individual seasons of the year. Let us now examine what the order and rationale were of the months instituted in honor of the Augustan house. No one would deny that the month dedicated to Augustus himself could not but stand at the head of the series. Accordingly, the Syro-Macedonians continued in accordance with their ancient custom to begin their year from October, that is, from the autumnal equinox; thereafter, as we learn from the glossary, they aligned the structure of the year with the Julian year in such a way that the first month, i.e., Σεβαστός, was equated with January, the first month of the Romans, and the remaining months followed in sequence. And in our dodecaeteris, since Σεβαστός is said to correspond to October, Ἀγρίππαιος to November, Λίβαιος to December, Ὀκτάβαιος to January, Νερώναιος to March, Ἀγχίσαιος to June, and Ῥωμαῖος to July,

1 The same occurred in Asia Minor under Emperor Augustus: cf. Mommsen, Mitth. d. athen. Instituts 1899, p. 287: "Everywhere the principled reconciliation goes hand in hand with the preservation of old forms and designations: the January New Year and the Roman month names remain foreign to the East, but the principles of the fixed solar year and the leap day are uniformly carried through."

Ἀγρίππαιος secundum in anno locum, Λίβαιος tertium, Ὀκτάβαιος quartum, Νερώναιος sextum, Ἀγχίσαιος nonum, Ῥωμαῖος decimum obtinet. Prorsus eundem ordinem menses "Ellenorum" sive Syromacedonum libro glossarum traditi sequebantur. Itaque cum in descriptione anni Arietis nomen mensis Maio similis omissum sit, Δρουσαίου [1] inserere minime dubitavi.

Ἀγρίππαιον Novembri, Λίβαιον Decembri etc. simillimos esse diximus. Neque tamen in idem plane tempus ullos utrimque menses incidisse apparet. Nam Λιβαίου dies XXIV est Decembris dies XXV; Ὀκταβαίου dies XXVII est XXVIII Ianuarii; Νερωναίου dies XXIII est Martii XXIV; Ῥωμαίου dies XXII est Iulii XXIII. Igitur Λίβαιον a secundo die Decembris, Ὀκτάβαιον a secundo Ianuarii, Νερώναιον a secundo Martii, Ῥωμαῖον a secundo Iulii initium cepisse consentaneum est. Quae si recte disputata sunt, nullo modo fieri poterat, ut tertius dies Octobris cum decimo Σεβαστοῦ conferretur. Nam si Σεβαστόν ad Octobris instar dies XXXI, Ἀγρίππαιον ut Novembrem XXX habuisse statuimus, Λίβαιος non a secundo die Decembris, sed iam a XXIV die Novembris incipere debuit : quod contra ipsa auctoris verba pugnat. Ergo verba τῇ πρὸ ε' νωνῶν Ὀκτωβρίων Σεβαστοῦ ι' aliquam corruptelam acceperunt : scilicet pro numero ι' reponendus est β'. Quae omnia si mihi conceduntur, hunc in modum tempore Augusti Syromacedonum fasti instituti esse videntur :

Σεβαστός	dies	XXXI :	2 Oct.	—	1 Nov.
Ἀγρίππαιος	dies	XXX :	2 Nov.	—	1 Dec.
Λίβαιος	dies	XXXI :	2 Dec.	—	1 Ian.

Quod autem Syromacedones non a primo sed a secundo die Octobris mensem primum coepisse videntur, Usener primum anni diem eos Octobris diem primum statuisse et sanctissimum anni initium non numerasse censet. Quam ob causam diem Octobris secundum Σεβαστὸν α' appellavisse neque tamen Sebasto dies

[2] Vergiliarum exortum in anno Arietis τῇ πρὸ ε' καλανδῶν Μαίων (= 27 April.) κε' esse PM consentiunt. Δρουσαίου supplendum esse diximus : at tabula inspecta Δρουσαίου diem XXV non a. d. V Kal. Maias sed a. d. VI fuisse concedes. Igitur τῇ πρὸ ς' Καλ. Μ. restituendum esse videtur.

Ἀγρίππαιος holds the second place in the year, Λίβαιος the third, Ὀκτάβαιος the fourth, Νερώναιος the sixth, Ἀγχίσαιος the ninth, Ῥωμαῖος the tenth. The months of the "Hellenes," or Syro-Macedonians, as transmitted in the book of glossaries, followed precisely the same order. Therefore, since in the description of the year the name of the month similar to May has been omitted under Aries, I did not hesitate in the least to insert Ἀρουσαίου.

We have said that Ἀγρίππαιος is very similar to November, Λίβαιος to December, etc. Yet it is apparent that no months from either system fell at exactly the same time. For the 24th day of Λίβαιος corresponds to the 25th of December; the 27th day of Ὀκτάβαιος corresponds to the 28th of January; the 23rd day of Νερώναιος corresponds to the 24th of March; the 22nd day of Ῥωμαῖος corresponds to the 23rd of July. It is therefore reasonable to conclude that Λίβαιος began from the second day of December, Ὀκτάβαιος from the second of January, Νερώναιος from the second of March, and Ῥωμαῖος from the second of July. If this reasoning is correct, it would have been entirely impossible for the third day of October to be compared with the tenth of Σεβαστός. For if we assume that Σεβαστός, like October, had 31 days, and Ἀγρίππαιος, like November, had 30, then Λίβαιος should have begun not from the second day of December, but already from the 24th day of November — which directly contradicts the author's own words. Therefore, the phrase τῇ πρὸ ε' νωνῶν Ὀκτωβρίων Σεβαστοῦ τ' has suffered some corruption: that is, the numeral τ' must be replaced by β'. If all of this is granted to me, it appears that the Syro-Macedonian calendar was established in the following manner during the time of Augustus:

Sebastos	days XXXI:nXXX	2 Oct.	— 1 Nov.
Agrippaios	days	: 2 Nov.	— 1 Dec.
Libaios	days XXXI : 2 Dec.		— 1 Jan.
Oktabaios	days XXXI : 2 Jan.		— 1 Feb.
[Ἰούλαιος]2 Feb.	day XXVIII:		— 1 Mar.

As for the fact that the Syro-Macedonians appear to have begun their first month not from the first but from the second day of October, Usener holds that they established the first day of October as the first day of the year and did not count it among the numbered days of the sacred new year. For this reason, they called the second day of October Σεβαστός 1, yet did not number it among the Sebasto days.

• PM agrees that the rising of the Pleiades in the year of Aries falls on τῇ πρὸ ε' καλανδῶν Μαίων (= 27 April.), i.e., the 25th. We have stated that Αρουσαίου should be supplied; but upon inspection of the table, you will concede that the 25th day of Αρουσαίου falls not on a. d. V Kal. Maias but on a. d. VI. Therefore it seems that τῇ πρὸ ς' Καλ. M. ought to be restored.

XXX sed XXXI ut Octobri dedisse : sequitur aut Καπετώλιον mensem ultimum non XXX dies sed XXIX aut Αἰνεδδαιον paenultimum non XXXI sed XXX habuisse. Similem in modum Asianos mensium XXXI dierum secundum quemque diem non β' sed item α' appellasse idem probavit (Bullett. dell' Instit. 1874, p. 74, cf. Mommsen l. s. l. p. 285). Syromacedonici autem anni ordo cum prorsus ad honorem domus Augustanae spectet neque diu retineri potuerit, dodecaeterida nostram sub ipso Augusto scriptam esse verisimile est.

5. De altera dodecaeteride non est quod multa dicamus. Excerptum aridissimum homo quidam Byzantinus nescio quo antiquiore usus exemplari confecisse videtur. [F. B.]

XXX but rather XXXI as it gave to October: it follows either that the month Καπετώλιον, the last, had not XXX days but XXIX, or that Αἰνεάδαιον, the penultimate, had not XXXI but XXX. In like manner, he has demonstrated that the Asians designated every other day of months of XXXI days not as β' but likewise as α' (Bullett. dell' Instit. 1874, p. 74, cf. Mommsen l. s. l. p. 285). Moreover, since the order of the Syro-Macedonian year was entirely designed to honor the house of Augustus and could not have been maintained for long, it is probable that our dodecaeteris was written under Augustus himself.

5. Concerning the second dodecaeteris there is not much to say. It appears that some Byzantine scholar, drawing upon an older exemplar unknown to us, compiled this exceedingly dry excerpt.

I. The First Dodecaeteris.

Accurate twelve-year cycle of year 6496 [1996 p. Ch.]: this is year 1; and again in the 16th year, year 1; and upon the completion of every 12 years, year 1; and thus it proceeds until the completion of the world, most fittingly so.

Year <1> of Aries.

This year will be harsh from the north. Winter will be cold, persistent, severe, snowy, not easily dissolved, intensified by winds; at mid-winter [guided along] on the day five days before the Kalends of February, the 27th of <Octavius>, great winds will arise from the winter rising; but with the breath of Zephyr after the vernal equinox, which falls five days before the Kalends of April, the air then changes after 3 days into rain and frequent, gentle winds, and after yet another 3 days until the rising of the Pleiades, five days before the Kalends of May, the 25th of <Drusaeus>. Spring will be hot after the winter, summer temperate, and autumn hot. Great rivers will form during this year. The early sowing must be undertaken, commenced, and completed from the month of November and Agrippaeus; otherwise, what comes later will be inferior. The grain crop will exceed the wine crop; there will be good fortune for the livestock; and the year will prove not unproductive, but bountiful.

Year <2> of Taurus.

The second year in its condition will be as follows: dominated by westerly winds; the winter as it begins will be warm, temperate — it will be stormy from mid-winter <from the 5th day before the Kalends of February, 5 <until the vernal equinox> on the 5th day before the Kalends of April, the 27th of Neronaeus. Rather, as it declines it will in any case be intensified <and> will settle into extreme cold. The middle <of summer> will be hot <and> scorching because the Etesian winds will be lacking, and the autumn temperate; it will be damp and unsettled. The sowing must be completed from the month of November and Agrippaeus within 30 days. This year is well-suited to all natural growth and beneficial for the care of livestock; there will be good seasons. Of the regions, the more level lands will be more productive. Yet contrary to expectation all the fruits will appear in lesser quantity. And the sea will be wintry.

Year 3 of Gemini.

In this year the air will for the most part be southerly. The winter will be harsh, sluggish and very thick, snowy; eclipses of wind will be rare. Spring will be temperate; it will bring forth abundant and frequent rains. Likewise summer will also be temperate, because the winds will be bright and persist for a long time; from the rising of the Dog Star on the 10th day before the Kalends of August, the 22nd of Romaeus, there will be brilliant south winds and signs of rain. It will also have good and timely sowings; and there will be abundance in all things on account of the winds' * toward a certain eclipse. The grain harvest will respond most abundantly owing to the fine temperament of the air; but the vintage, contrary to expectation, will be less. All work should be undertaken in advance, lest the crops outpace the labors. There will also be a yield of woodland fruits. The year is well suited to planting and the remaining labors. One must in all things take thought for the crops, and take care <also> of the remaining necessities, on account of the winter that will blow in.

Year 4 of Cancer.

The constitution of the year shall be as follows: it will carry northern winds in season; at times one must also expect a harsh winter — snowy, untimely for the most part, and accompanied by hail. Yet occasionally a temperate blending of the air will occur. The winter will set in early and subside slowly, unless around the winter solstice — which begins on the eighth day before the Kalends of January, the 24th of Libaios — a period of respite from rains ensues and calm, fair weather prevails. After the winter solstice there will be much stormy weather, bringing heavy and continuous snows. The air is stirred toward the equinox, which falls on the ninth day before the Kalends of April, the 21st of Neronaeus; and the air will shift, marked by frequent weather signs, likewise by hail and showers, until the summer solstice on the 25th day before the Kalends of July, the 26th of Anchisaeus. Rivers and torrents will flood. Sowing must be done late. Of the regions, the rougher areas will prove more productive. Of the remaining crops, a moderate yield is to be expected, as well as loss of livestock. The year will be healthful and the crops most wholesome; the Dionysiac vintage will be more abundant than the rest. The year is not favorable for planting or for agricultural labor. The sea, too, will be stormy.

Year 5 of Leo.

This year will for the most part be characterized by east winds. Winter will be unrelenting, snowy and frosty, cold and rainless, especially around the winter solstice on the day before the 8th of the Kalends of January, the 24th of Libaios; the cold season will set in late and cease quickly. Spring will be rainy; the springs will run dry. Autumn will be torrid and waterless. From the vernal equinox on the day before the 9th of the Kalends of April, the 23rd of Neronios, northerly winds will blow continuously throughout. The sowing should be done early and completed from the month of December and Libaios; those after

Those who come after will be inferior. All harvests will appear moderate, and the year will be neither fruitful nor barren. All agricultural works should proceed at their customary times. Consider this year unsuitable for planting and not favorable for livestock, though suitable for cultivation. Of the regions, the plains will be more fertile than the others.

Fourth Year of Virgo.

This year will have very many winds from the west and south. Winter, as it begins, will be warm; in its middle season it will be temperate, with irregular rains; as it ends it will be snowy and windy, with much frost and swollen rivers. Spring and summer will be hot and rainless, except that from the rising of the Dog Star — which falls on the day before the tenth of the Kalends of August, the 22nd by the Roman reckoning — there will be violent, torrential rains, such that the grain crop will also be destroyed. Autumn will be scorching and windy. Sowing should be carried out from the month of December and Libaeus. Of the regions, the more mountainous ones will be more fertile, and especially those in which sowing is done at the right time; the yield of tree fruits will be moderate. The year will be favorable for planting; all agricultural work runs late, and the customary gathering of grain crops must be done quickly on account of the rains foretold above. The Dionysiac fruit will be abundant and productive. Among four-footed animals there will be destruction in many regions, but humans will be in good health. Springs will run dry.

Year <4> of Libra.

This year will be for the most part stormy, having a temperate winter 25 and abundant rains, and in the beginning warm, with a watery middle period. From the winter solstice, on the day before the 6th of the Kalends of January, the 26th of Libaeus, bright west winds will blow from the west and south; but the spring will be cold and snowy and unsettled; spring continuing

The early sowing must be completed. Those who sow late will obtain inferior harvests. Of the regions, the more level areas will be more fertile; and the grain crop will exceed the wine crop; and there will be abundance of timber trees. The year is not favorable for planting; there will be destruction of livestock in certain areas; and it will be perilous for women who are with child.

Year <8> of Scorpio.

This year will be dominated <.....> for the most part. It will have a temperate and seasonable winter until the winter solstice on the 8th day before the Kalends of January, the 24th of Libaeus, and the end of winter likewise temperate. At mid-winter, on the 5th day before the Kalends of February, the 27th of Octavaeus, there will be smooth winds and a great rush of waters * turbulent and rivers will be in flood. Spring will be southerly and rainy; summer will be sickly; autumn will be safe on account of the Etesian winds, when they blow. There will be destruction of the grain crop in certain areas.

Year <9> of Sagittarius.

In this year the winds will be northerly. Winter will be snowy, continuous, and not easily dissolved; it is also wont to produce foul and unseasonable winds. And the beginning of winter will be unseasonable and cold; toward its end rather more temperate, if not toward mid-season; at mid-winter on the 5th day before the Kalends of February it will be unsettled until the summer solstice on the 6th day before the Kalends of July, bringing notable weather signs and rains. After the rising of the Dog Star on the 10th day before the Kalends of August there will be a disturbance of the atmosphere; let there be turbulent winds and waters; and toward the end of autumn there will be a movement of great winds. The sowing must be completed from the month of Apellaeus and November and Agrippa. Of the places, the plains will be more fertile. But the Dionysiac will be moderate, neither increasing more nor falling short. Above all, the cereal crop will be most fertile. The year will be suitable for planting. The springs will dry up. There will be destruction of <dogs>. And the sea will be stormy.

Year <10> Capricorn.

In this year there will be a mild winter, with rains up to the winter solstice on the eighth day before the Kalends of January. Around the middle of winter there will be a respite from rain; and after this again a rainy <spring>, up to the summer solstice on the eighth day before the Kalends of July. The summer will be very intense, and the autumn waterless and scorching; the sowing will be good and the cereal crop likewise; the wine crop will turn out better than expected; the olive crop will be good in some places, and the timber crops must be brought forth earlier. In this year there will be earthquakes and bodily destruction in many places and great rivers, and the year will be suitable for cultivation and planting.

Year <11> Aquarius.

In this year very many east winds will blow, seasonable and beneficial to all the cereal crop, and especially to the timber crops. And all the sowings will be good in their respective places; but the previous year's works will proceed slowly. There will be at certain times lulls in the winds. In autumn the year turns out to be fertile, providing good fortune for livestock and suited for planting; yet the offspring of irrational animals will be poor on account of the abundance of crops. Earthquakes too are accustomed to occur in this year.

Year <12> of Pisces.

In this year the cycle is completed, revolving back to the beginning of all these things; very many winds will blow, since they come from the winter setting. And indeed <winter> is calm and rainless at the start; but after this it will have many and great rains, untimely and frosty. There will be hail in this year. In spring, bright winds will blow, zephyrs. And the summer will be scorching, while the autumn will be sickly. In the very last parts the wintry winds will be bright together with the southern winds; and the whole year will be varied. There will be flooding rivers and the sea will be stormy.

II. Second Dodecaeteris.

The year of Aries: cold winter; in the middle of winter, south winds will blow; winter begins early and ends late. The crops will be destroyed, especially from a dry star, until the frost of the equinox. But many winds; you shall sow in autumn from the 40th day of November. Anticipate the Moon. There will be great rivers. The works of the vine are late. Spring is without rain; summer is temperate. There is need to store up fodder for cattle, and likewise also the fruit of Dionysus.

The year of Taurus is temperate; afflictions of men. Winter begins early and ends late; great cold.

The year of Gemini: winter begins with southerly winds; later cold and snowy. A good season; abundance of fruit from trees and much rain. Spring is temperate; good fortune in every undertaking. Summer is scorching and suitable for planting.

The year of Cancer is windy; great rivers; winter is early; and sowing is quick within 50 days, since it portends rains. But also summer is late, since spring is very wet; and from the month of March, east winds will blow; the early growth of crops is good, but they fall sick; and the springs will fail. Wine in the region of the Bear; the high places will be scorched.

8 days before the Kalends of January, winter begins and quickly ceases again. Spring will be rainy; summer will be scorching. 6 days before the Kalends of April, winter will blow from the north. Sow early; but from the month of November they should be more cautious. The crops will be moderate; and it is favorable for planting.

In the year of Virgo, the year will be windy; winter will be mild. Sowing is laborious for 50 days, for there will be turns of winter; but the flatter lands will bear fruit; and the Dionysiac crop will be moderate; lay up stores of fodder. Summer will be wet, and the vintage will be spoiled by the weather. It is also favorable for plants and suitable for four-footed animals; and there will be an abundance of oil.

The year of Libra: great winter, severe frosts; great rivers. Spring without rain; from August there will be heavy rains; autumn windy; early sowing; moderate harvests. Good for plants; much wine; and destruction of four-footed animals.

The year of Scorpio: many winds. Winter mild; early winter storms strong until the setting of the Pleiades. Much grain. Anticipate every task; good for plants. Summer until the Dog Star requires haste, because it was rainy. Scarcity of birds and wild animals; abundance of fish; plenty of oil.

The year of Sagittarius: continuous wars; northern winds, snow-laden. Winter very cold, unseasonable, unsettled. Autumn windy; sowing from the month of November; late summer and good for plants.

The year of Capricorn is windy; much snow. Winter begins suddenly from the month of <...> until the 28th of February. Good sowing <and> harvest. No scarcity of birds then. But also earthquakes; and the crops will be destroyed.

The year of Aquarius is windy; winter begins <mild> from the beginning of the month of January until the 15th of February; and from the feast of the lamp

Achmes de figuris decanorum

(Achmetis Introductionis in astrologiam caput IX)

Capitulum de figuris decanorum primo mihi contigit ut in codice Paris. gr. 2420 (olim Colbert. 2079) invenirem, qui mihi summa praefectorum Bibliothecae Publicae Parisinae liberalitate huc missus erat; deinde in cod. Marciano 334. In utroque codice auctoris nomine caret; quem tamen Achmetem astrologum s. X fuisse codice Marciano 324 (v. supra, p. 6) comprobatur, ubi eius " Introductio et fundamentum astrologiae " fol. 202 sqq. exstat. Illius igitur operis capitulum nonum, quod in cod. Marc. 324, fol. 205ᵛ hunc in modum legitur inscriptum: Τὰ πρόσωπα τῶν ἀστέρων εἰς τοὺς δεκανοὺς τῶν ζῳδίων πρὸς τὰς τῶν ἀστέρων μορφάς edituri sumus: neque tamen ex cod. Marc. 324, qui nobis praesto non erat, sed ex codd. Marciano 334, s. XIV (M) fol. 116 sqq. et Parisino 2420, s. XVI (P) fol. 166ᵛ sqq. In utroque secundus Leonis decanus omissus est: qua re ex eodem archetypo eos fluxisse elucet, ita tamen ut Parisinus ubique fere pleniorem et integriorem exhibeat lectionem, Marcianus saepissime correctam et interpolatam. Ceterum ex hoc ipso Achmetis capitulo iam Meursius nescio quo codice usus nova quaedam vocabula (πέδουκλον et γονάχιον) in Glossarium graecobarbarum (p. 527 et 137) recepit: cf. Cangium I, 1139 et II, 42.

Decanorum figurae et munera ab Achmete minime ficta sunt. Nam eadem fere leguntur apud Albumasarem in libro sexto Introductorii in astronomiam (latine editi Aug. Vind. 1489) et apud Avenarem sive Aben-Ezram, quem latine vertit Scaliger in notis ad Manilium [1655] p. 336-347. Uterque sphaeram Indicam se tradere affirmant. Ac ne Indi quidem hoc doctrinae genus invenere, quamquam eos plurima de suo immutasse et addidisse consentaneum est. Nam Teucrum Babylonium saeculi primi ut videtur scriptorem similia exposuisse Psellus testatur (Lect. mir., ed. Westermann, Paradoxogr., p. 147, 21 sqq.): Ἀπὸ δὲ τῶν Τεύκρου τοῦ Βαβυλωνίου πολλά τις ἂν εὕροι θαυμασιώτατα ἀπό τε τῶν ἐν οὐρανῷ ζῳδίων καὶ ἀπὸ τῶν παρανατελλόντων ἑκάστῳ τούτων καὶ ἀπὸ τῶν λεγομένων δεκανῶν παντοδαπὰς ἀφορμὰς ἐν διαφόροις πράξεσι ποριζόμενος. εἰσὶ γὰρ ἐν ἑκάστῳ τῶν ζῳδίων τρεῖς κατειλεγμένοι δεκανοὶ ποικιλόμορφοι, ὁ μὲν κατέχων πέλεκυν, ὁ δ' εἰς ἄλλο τι ἐσχηματισμένος εἰκόνισμα ὧν εἰ τὰ εἴδη καὶ τὰ σχήματα ἐν δακτυλίων ἐγγλύψεις σφενδόνῃ, ἀποτρόπαιά winds begin, and much snow, and violent rains; and the crops will be destroyed; and grain; the time is not deadly, and good for plants.

Pisces: the year of these is windy from the setting of the Pleiades. Winter without rain; spring with hail. Good sowing; Dionysian produce moderate; the catching of fish and disappearance of animals. [G. B.]

Achmet on the figures of the decans

(Chapter IX of Achmet's Introduction to Astrology)

The chapter on the figures of the decans first came to my attention when I found it in codex Paris.gr. 2420 (formerly Colbert. 2079), which had been sent to me through the great generosity of the directors of the Public Library of Paris; subsequently also in cod. Marciano 334. In both codices it lacks the author's name; yet that he was Achmet the astrologer of the 10th century is confirmed by codex Marciano 324 (see above, p. 6), where his Introduction and Foundation of Astrology exists at fol. 209 sqq. We are therefore about to publish the ninth chapter of that work, which in cod. Marc. 324, fol. 205 is found inscribed in the following manner: Τὰ πρόσωπα τῶν ἀστέρων εἰς τοὺς δεκανοὺς τῶν Ζῳδίων πρὸς τὰς τῶν ἀστέρων μορφάς: not, however, from cod. Marc. 324, which was not available to us, but from codd. Marciano 334, 14th c. (M) fol. 116 sqq. and Parisino 2420, 16th c. (P) fol. 166* sqq. In both the second decan of Leo is omitted: from which it is clear that they flowed from the same archetype, yet in such a way that the Parisian manuscript almost everywhere presents a fuller and more complete reading, the Marcian one very often a corrected and interpolated one. Moreover, from this very chapter of Achmet, Meursius, using some codex unknown to me, had already included certain new words (πέδουκλον and γονάχιον in the Glossarium graecobarbarum (p.527 and 137): cf. Cangium I, 1139 and II, 42.

The figures and roles of the decans were not invented by Achmet. For nearly the same things are found in Albumasar in the sixth book of his Introductorium in astronomiam (published in Latin, Augsburg 1489) and in Avenares or Aben-Ezra, whom Scaliger translated into Latin in his notes on Manilius [1655] pp. 336–347. Both affirm that they are transmitting the Indian sphere. Nor indeed did the Indians invent this kind of doctrine, although it is consistent that they changed and added a great deal of their own. For Psellus testifies that TEUCER OF BABYLON, a writer apparently of the first century, expounded similar things (Lect. mir., ed. Westermann, Paradoxogr., p. 147, 21 sqq.): Ἀπὸ δὲ τῶν Τεύκρου του Βαβυλωνίου πολλά τις ἂν εὕροι θαυμασιώτατα ἀπό τε τῶν ἐν οὐρανῷ ζῳδίων καὶ ἀπὸ τῶν παρανατελλόντων ἑκάστῳ τούτων καὶ ἀπὸ τῶν λεγομένων δεκανῶν παντοδαπὰς ἀφορμὰς ἐν διαφόροις πράξεσι ποριζόμενος. εἰσὶ γὰρ ἐν ἑκάστῳ τῶν Ζῳδίων τρεῖς κατειλεγμένοι δεκανοί ποικιλόμορφοι, ὁ μὲν κατέχων πέλεκυν, ὁ δ᾽ εἰς ἄλλο τι ἐσχηματισμένος εἰκόνισμα ὧν εἰ τὰ εἴδη καὶ τὰ σχήματα ἐν δακτυλίων ἐγγλύψεις σφενδόνῃ, ἀποτρόπαια σοι δεινῶν γενήσεται. Quod autem Psellus securi armatum decanum prae ceteris nominaverit, id mero casui non debetur. Etenim ita primum primi signi id est Arietis decanum fictum esse et ab Achmete discimus et ara illa celeberrima a. 1705 in Monte Aventino effossa, de qua Bianchinus v. cl. primus egit. Itaque Indorum doctrina ab Achmete tradita fontem quendam Graecum sapere videtur[1].— Sermonem semibarbarum, quo haec aevo Byzantino ex lingua Arabica translata sunt, corrigere non licere non est quod moneam. [F. B.]

F. 116. Περὶ δεκανῶν ἤτοι περὶ μορφῆς καὶ προσώπων τῶν ιβ' ζῳδίων καὶ πρὸς τίνα τῶν ζ' ἀστέρων ἔχουσι συγγένειαν.

Ἕκαστον ζῴδιον τρία πρόσωπα ἔχει ἤτοι τρεῖς δεκανοὺς καὶ ἕκαστον πρόσωπον πρὸς ἕνα τῶν ἑπτὰ ἀστέρων συγγένειαν ἔχει.

Ὁ μὲν πρῶτος δεκανὸς τοῦ Κριοῦ τοῦ Ἄρεώς ἐστιν· ἐν τῇ χειρὶ αὐτοῦ ἀξίνη, ἣν καὶ θέλει ἀπορρίψαι· μελίχρους, μανιώδης· ὀφθαλμοὶ ὕφαιμοι· περιεζωσμένος ἱμάτια, ἀνυπόδητος.

Ὁ δὲ δεύτερος δεκανὸς Κριοῦ Ἡλίου ἐστί, διότι οἶκος αὐτοῦ Λέων ἐστί· γυνή· περὶ αὐτὴν ἱμάτια ἐρυθρά, εἰς τὸν πόδα αὐτῆς ἀφανισμὸν ἔχουσα· μορφὴ αὐτῆς ἵππου· ὁ νοῦς ταύτης εἰς τὰ μυρίσματα καὶ τὸν ἱματισμὸν καὶ τὸν χρυσόν.

Ὁ δὲ τρίτος δεκανὸς Κριοῦ τοῦ Διός, διότι οἶκος αὐτοῦ <Τοξότης· ἄνθρωπος· ἐν τῇ χειρὶ αὐτοῦ> ῥάβδος, ἐφ' ἣν ἀναπέπαυται· θυμώδης, ξανθός· ἐπὶ αὐτὸν ἱμάτια ἐρυθρά· θέλων τὸ ἀγαθὸν καὶ μὴ ποιῶν· θέλει γὰρ τὸ ἀγαθόν, διότι πρόσωπόν ἐστι Διός, κωλύεται δὲ παρὰ Ἄρεως, διότι οἶκος αὐτοῦ ἐστιν· ἔχει δὲ τὰς χεῖρας βεβαρυμένας καὶ ἐργάζεται τὸν σίδηρον.

Καὶ ὁ πρῶτος δεκανὸς Ταύρου Ἀφροδίτης· γυνὴ πλατυμέτωπος, κλαστόθριξ. μορφὴ αὐτῆς μορφὴ ἐλευθέρας· κεκαυμένα τὰ ἱμάτια αὐτῆς· ἡ μέριμνα ταύτης συναγωγὴ ἱματίων· τέκνων ἔχουσα κόσμια· καὶ αὐτὴ θέλει προσθεῖναι ἔτι καὶ ἔτι.

Ὁ δεύτερος δεκανὸς <Ταύρου> Ἑρμοῦ, διότι οἶκος αὐτοῦ Παρθένος ἐστίν· ἄνθρωπος· μορφὴ τούτου μορφὴ καμήλου, ὁ τράχηλος δὲ ταύρου· ἐσθίει ὥσπερ πρόβατον. περὶ αὐτὸν ἱμάτια λευκὰ ἀπὸ χρήσεως· μέριμνα τούτου ἡ σπορὰ καὶ <ἡ> κατάστασις τοῦ οἴκου καὶ τὰ ζευκτὰ καὶ εἰς τοῦτο καταντᾷ.

[1] Plane diversa ab his docet Hermes ed. Pitra, Analecta sacra et prof., V, 2, p. 285 sqq.

σοι δεινῶν γενήσεται. That Psellus named above all others the decan armed with an axe is not due to mere chance. For we learn both from Achmet and from that most celebrated altar excavated in the year 1705 on the Aventine Hill — concerning which the distinguished Bianchinus was the first to write — that the first decan of the first sign, that is Aries, was depicted in just this way. Thus the doctrine of the Indians as transmitted by Achmet appears to draw from some Greek source.[1] — That the semi-barbarous language in which these things were translated in the Byzantine era from the Arabic tongue cannot be corrected need not be pointed out by me. [F. B.]

F. 116. On the decans, that is, on the form and faces of the 12 Signs and with which of the 7 planets they have affinity.

Each sign has three faces, that is, three decans, and each face has affinity with one of the seven planets.

The first decan of Aries belongs to Mars: in his hand an axe, which he wishes to throw away; honey-colored complexion, frenzied, eyes bloodshot; girded with garments, barefoot.

The second decan of Aries belongs to the Sun, because his house is Leo: a woman; around her red garments, having a blemish on her foot; her form is that of a horse; her mind is on perfumes and clothing and gold.

The third decan of Aries belongs to Jupiter, because his house is <Sagittarius — a man; in his hand> a staff, on which he rests; irascible, fair-haired; upon him red garments; wishing good but not doing it; he wishes good, because he is a face of Jupiter, but is hindered by Mars, because it is his house; his hands are weighed down and he works iron.

And the first decan of Taurus belongs to Venus: a woman with a broad forehead, with curly hair; her form is the form of a free woman; her garments are worn out; her concern is the gathering of garments; she has the adornments of children and she herself wishes to add more and more.

The second decan <of Taurus> of Mercury, because his house is Virgo is; a man; his form is the form of a camel, but the neck of a bull; he eats like a sheep. Around him white garments from use; his concern is the sowing and <the> establishment of the household and the yoke-animals and to this he is devoted.

The first decan of Gemini of Mercury; a tall woman, fair to look upon; her concern is children and becoming pregnant, having knowledge in needlework and things similar to these.

The second decan of Gemini belongs to Venus, because her house is Libra; ; his form is the form of a griffin; he has crowned his head upon his staff; around him a coat of mail and a helmet, with him a bow and arrows; his concern is to be surrounded by those ornaments and to sit in gardens and where there are fragrances.

The third decan of Gemini belongs to Saturn, because his house is Aquarius; a man, seeking men. Around him a coat of mail; with him a bow and arrows; his concern is with tragedians and the kinds of voices; wearing ornaments and garments.

The first decan of Cancer belongs to <the Moon>; a man having a sideways and distorted appearance, his form is the form of an elephant and a horse; at his feet something like a small piece of skin; his clothing is leaves and the fruits of trees. His concern is the forests and to dwell in them. The second decan of Cancer belongs to Mars, because his house is Scorpio; a beautiful woman. Upon her head a crown woven with colors and fiery fragrances. Her concern is with tragedies and wealth; in her hand a branch of a tree, and she is crying out.

The third decan of Cancer belongs to Jupiter, because his house is Pisces; a man, stretching out a serpent in his hand; behind him is his foot; beauty is upon him; around him ornaments; his concern is to board ships and to sail the sea, and the seeking of gold and silver adorns women.

The first decan of Leo belongs to Jupiter, because his house is Sagittarius; a man; on his head white fragrances and a crown; speaking of thefts; in his hand a bow; his beard, like that of mustard; the hindquarters of a lion; around him a garment resembling fish scales.

The third decan of Leo belongs to Mars, because his house is Aries. His form is that of a man; his likeness that of a monkey; upon him garments; and all around him mange and itching; in his hand a staff.

The first decan of Virgo <of Mercury>: a maiden. Upon her garments
5 white <from use>; with her a basket containing fragrance; her concern is to visit her father and mother and teachers and the gathering of ornaments and garments and flowers.

The second decan of Virgo of Saturn, because his house is Capricorn: a man dark in appearance, having a very hairy body; upon 10 him leather garments; and the bark of trees and lunches. In his hand a pen-case. His concern is with calculations and letters.

The third decan of Virgo of Venus, because her house is Taurus: a noble man, fair; around him washed garments; upon them he sleeps; his concern is the building of churches and temples.

15 The first decan of Libra of Venus: a man; in his hand a measure and a scale; in workshops and marketplaces, with measures and weights; having oversight of sales and purchases.

The second decan of Libra of Saturn, because his house is Aquarius: a man; his form is the form of a hungry and thirsty eagle;
20 his desire is to be yoked in marriage and concerning children.

The third decan of Libra of Mercury, because his house is Gemini: a man; the form of a horse's head and the rest of his body the form of a man; upon him garments; he holds a bow, with which he has shot, and arrows; his concern is the forests and the woodlands.

25 The first decan of Scorpio of Mars: a woman; her form is of myrtle; called noble; her concern is for generations and dwellings and wealth and nourishment.

The second decan of Scorpio of Jupiter, because his house is Pisces: a comely woman who has tied a thread to her foot; and there is upon her neither adornment nor any garment; her dwelling is the sea and she desires to be on dry land.

The third decan of Scorpio of the Moon, because her house is Cancer: a man having dogs upon him; adamant; having a lion deprived of its head; a great head wishing to do good to one from another. The neck and the head of a man; holding a bow and arrows; wearing two linen garments; guarding the place of the <....>.

The second decan of Sagittarius of Mars, because his house is <Scorpio>: a woman of middling beauty and unattractiveness, with coarse hair; sitting upon her knees; she has opened a small vessel and gazes intently into it.

The third decan of Sagittarius of the Sun, because his house is Leo: a man; his complexion is the complexion of gold; upon a pleasant couch; upon him an omophorion and bark of trees; in his hand a staff, and upon it he rests.

The first decan of Capricorn of Saturn, because the house of Saturn is Capricorn: a man who is very hairy on his body; the form of a wild boar; his teeth are like caltrops; holding a fishing net and fetters of animals and hobbles of beasts.

The second decan of Capricorn of Venus, because her house is Taurus: a man; upon him garments of leopard skin; wrapped in a cloak; having ornate garments.

The third decan of Capricorn of Mercury, because his house is Virgo: a woman with beautiful eyes, fair in appearance, honey-complexioned, skilled in her works; her concern is with the making and sharing of affairs.

The first decan of Aquarius of Saturn: a man; his form is that of two eagles; in his hand a knee-guard and a carpet and a cloak; his concern is with affairs, and oil and wine and water are given.

The second decan of Aquarius belongs to Mercury, because his house is Gemini; long-bearded; the form of his face is the form of a horse; in his hand a bow full of a dart; and on his shoulder he carries a vessel containing hyacinths and emerald and of the other metals.

The third decan of Aquarius belongs to Venus, because her <house> is Libra. A man of honey-colored complexion, having many hairs in his ears, contemptible, weak; upon him a crown of leaves and fruits and produce; having iron tools under him; and coming.

The first decan of Pisces, of Jupiter: a man; in his hand a blade and two fish; upon him linen garments; ships are his concern and the return to his own home; and the menstrual period of his wife.

The second decan of Pisces, of the Moon, because her house is Cancer; a woman in a ship, fair of face, on the sea, white, of beautiful form, displaying her own nature, holding a sphere; and neighbors and friends. Her concern is to return to dry land.

The third decan of Pisces, of Mars, because his house is Scorpio: a man stretching a serpent toward his foot, until he appeared naked; he has no garment; he produces robbers. G. B.

F. 143. Of Dorotheus, concerning the sick.

Suppose the ascendant to be the sick person, the setting to be the place where the sick person lies and the nature of the illness itself, the midheaven to be the physician, and the lower heaven to be the outcome of the illness; likewise the Moon also signifies what the illness is and of what kind and what its cause is. When, therefore, the ascendant is beheld by the malefics and the setting by the benefics, it signifies that the sick person is gravely ill and will linger in the sickness; but if the midheaven is afflicted, it signifies that the sick person will fall into the hands of a bad physician and that the fault lies with the physician. The lower heaven beheld by the malefics signifies undoubted danger for the sick person; but if by the benefics, it signifies salvation. Observe also which star produced the illness, that is, the one that became occidental or under the rays a few days before the illness, squaring the Moon or opposing it, and observe when the configuration changes, that is, to the oriental position and the remaining configurations, and at that time health will come to the sick person. to avoid having it take effect in Aries or Scorpio, for that is harmful; nor in Pisces, Cancer, or Virgo, for they provoke vomiting. It should be administered most especially in a human-form sign, such as Gemini, Libra, Sagittarius, or Aquarius. It may also be given in Aries and Scorpio if urgency requires, except that these signs cause rumbling and stimulate vomiting. Leo is similar. In Scorpio one may rather administer it, for just as Scorpio is an investigator of hidden things, so too the purge searches and cleanses the entire inner cavity. In Capricorn by no means, for it causes colic on account of the coiling nature of its tail. Purgings are suited to when the Moon is descending and in the descending node. The sign most favorable for vomiting is Aries [Scorpio], because it causes rumbling.

The horoscope resembles air; for this reason it is also warmer and moist; the midheaven resembles fire; for this reason it is warm and dry; the setting resembles water; for this reason it is cold and moist; the subterranean resembles earth; for this reason it is cold and dry. W. K.

G. 182. 60. On Those Who Died in a Foreign Land.

Deaths in a foreign land occur when the stars that have occupied the destructive places fall into the declining houses, and especially when the Moon, being present or (in square aspect) or (in opposition), chances to be at the 5 aforementioned places. Others examine the question of death from the 8th place, looking at its form and its nature and the lord of this place and the stars in aspect with it, and from these they pronounce judgment on the kinds of death as well, in accordance with the previously mentioned natures of stars and signs. Others, counting from the Moon to the eighth sign of the horoscope, 10 arrive at their conclusion; and whatever place it falls upon, and the lord of that place, one examines the witnesses to these. W. K.

to whatever place it might fall, and the lord of that place, they examine who are the witnesses over these.
From these they determined both a shameful and a noble end (τὸν P; φράσαντο P).

Cf. what was noted above on p. 33 from f. 146 in the description of the codex. A method similar to that recommended by Firm. 237, 27, where we have added some notes.

Anonymous work on the planets.

I have edited this small book, which fills folios 184–194 of codex 6, because the greater part of it agrees so closely with what Firmicus transmits in book VI, f. 67'a–76'a (with the additions of the Codex Borbo- nicus, concerning which cf. ad p. 170, 5.23), that it is immediately apparent at first glance that the same author underlies both. For this little book is divided into two parts; in the first, apart from a few remarks made about the nature of the seven stars, the conjunctions of pairs of stars with one another are set forth, and in the second (p. 28, v. 16 ff.) those of triplets. If we examine the first part, setting aside for now those paragraphs that deal with individual planets, the order is such that first the conjunctions of Saturn, then of Jupiter, and then of the others are enumerated; and Saturn is first viewed placed together with the others, then joined with Jupiter and the rest in trine, square, opposition, and by ray; and the same order is maintained for Jupiter and the others. Concerning the hexagonal configuration, a few remarks are appended at the end (but cf. p. 165, 1). These chapters are drawn from essentially one author, who is not explicitly named; in addition, a few passages derive from VETTIUS VALENS, whose name is prefixed, namely,some remarks about pairs of stars placed together; but the author described such things only for Saturn and Jupiter, and once, as I believe, for Mars (cf. ad 174, 12), and once for Mercury (p. 176, 22; cf. also 27, v. 5.8); in the trines, squares, oppositions, and rays, Valens is neither mentioned nor used. To what author the rest of the material goes back must be concluded from the fact that the hexameters apparent dictionisque epicae frustula manifestissima (quae diductis litteris distinguenda curavi ita ut certa tantum respicerem); ubicunque enim paraphrasis talis apparet, paene certum est latere aut Dorotheum Sidonium, aut Anubionem. Inter utrumque mente fluctuaremus, nisi haec cum Anubionis paraphrasi, quae infra edetur, ita conspiraret ut omnis de fonte tolleretur dubitatio. Haec vero ipsa, quae ad Anubionem referenda sunt, cum Firmico congruunt, qui diserte testatur se libros eius cognitos habuisse (p. 91, v. 13; 196, v. 21). Et si oleum, quod ex ampulla rhetorica nimium destillavit bonus Firmicus, deterseris, videbis eum usque adeo cum his libelli nostri capitibus conspirare, ut suspicio oboriatur eum eadem paraphrasi usum esse carminis Anubiani, qua huius libelli auctorem; neque enim obstat, quod modo hic modo ille paulo plenior est. Quaeritur autem uter ordinem quem in fonte invenit conservaverit; Firmicus enim ita enumerat, ut primum trigonas tetragonas diametras, deinde pariter positas coniunctiones ponat. Qua in quaestione inde opinor proficiscendum, quod tractatus Marcianus in stellis simul collocatis eodem quo Firmicus utitur ordine et quod omisit Solis et Lunae coniunctionem, Mercurii et Lunae trigonam radiationem (nam quod de Solis cum Venere et Mercurio coniunctionibus omnibus tacet, de consilio videtur fecisse; cf. ad 179, 15); id quod ei facile potuit accidere, dum auctoris sui ordinem immutat. Firmicum igitur potius Anubionis dispositionem referre statuo, ita tamen ut coniunctiones proprias ante radiationes collocatas fuisse posse non negem. — Capita vero ea, quibus de septem stellarum natura exponitur, dictionis epicae vestigium nullum servantia ex Valente et Ptolemaeo consuta sunt; et illius quidem verba conferre non licuisset, quod et in Vaticano et in Seldeniano libro haec capita desunt, nisi felicissimo casu in Marciano 314 a Francisco Cumont inventa essent (cf. supra p. 83 ss.). — Restat praeterea unum partis prioris additamentum, duo geniturarum exempla post caput de Saturno inserta p. 168, 4. 24; quae unde fluxisse possint, in adnotatione significavi. — In alteram vero partem investiganti, qua ternarum stellarum coniunctiones tractantur, non minus prospere cessit res; nam haec omnia e Valente desumpta esse apparuit invento pleniore libri primi contextu, qui inest in cod. Marc. 314 (cf. supra p. 83 sqq.).

and the most obvious fragments of the epic speech appear (which I have taken care to distinguish by the letters, so that I can only look back with certainty); for wherever such a paraphrase appears, it is almost certain that either Dorotheus Sidonius or Anubionus is on the side. And we should have fluctuated in our minds, had not this conspired with the paraphrase of Anubius, which is given below, so as to remove all doubt as to the source. But these things themselves, although they are to be referred to Anubion, agree with Firmicus, who eloquently testifies that he had known the books before him (p. 91, v. 13; 196, v. 21). And if you wipe away the oil which the good Firmicus has dripped too much from the rhetorical bottle, you will see that he conspires so far with these chapters of our pamphlet, that I suspect that he used the same para-nphrasis of the poem of Anubius, as the author of this pamphlet; for it does not prevent him from being a little fuller in this way. Now the question is which order he found in the source; For Firmicus enumerates in such a way that he first places the diameters of the trigons and tetragons, and then puts the conjuncts equally placed.On this question I think one should proceed from the fact that the Marcian treatise, in the case of stars placed together, uses the same order as Firmicus, and that it omitted the conjunction of the Sun and Moon and the trine aspect of Mercury and Moon (for the fact that it is silent about all conjunctions of the Sun with Venus and Mercury seems to have been done deliberately; cf. on 179, 15); this could easily have happened to him while he was altering the order of his source. I therefore conclude that Firmicus rather preserves the arrangement of Anubion, while not denying that the proper conjunctions could have been placed before the aspects. But those chapters in which the nature of the seven stars is set forth, preserving no trace of epic diction, have been stitched together from VALENS and PTOLEMY; and indeed it would not have been possible to compare the words of the former, since these chapters are absent both in the Vatican and in the Seldonian manuscript, had they not been found by the happiest chance in Marcianus 314 by Franz Cumont (cf. above p. 83 ff.). — There remains, furthermore, one addition to the first part, two examples of nativities inserted after the chapter on Saturn at p. 168, 4. 24; from what source these may have derived I have indicated in the note.In investigating the second part, which deals with the conjunctions of three stars, the matter turned out no less successfully; for it became apparent that all of this was drawn from Valens, once the fuller text of the first book, which is contained in cod. Marc. 314, was discovered (cf. above p. 83 sqq.).

Regarding the method of my edition, I say one thing: that I have enclosed in round brackets only those terminations written by the scribe in abbreviated form where the strokes of the manuscript could be read in different ways. W. K.

of wearing black, squalor, hardship, exile, downfall, gloominess, want, inactivity, sluggishness, laziness, slothfulness, delay, obstruction of affairs, concealment, confinement, accusations, imprisonment, orphanhood, abandonment, mourning, widowhood, and childlessness. He is also a cause of love of money, depth of thought, stubbornness, envy, cowardice, withdrawal, love of solitude, heartlessness, unpleasantness, and joylessness. All these things he produces when he is by himself and in aspect with no one; for when configured with another, he blends his own characteristics both from his own nature and from that of the planet with which he is configured. For although he is avaricious and a hoarder, if he is associated with Jupiter he becomes generous, well-disposed, and fond of his household; but he becomes such only when both are positioned favorably in respect to the cosmos, for all good things come about when the stars are well-placed, just as all bad things come about when they are badly placed.

15He rules over paternal and elderly persons; and over the substances of lead, wood, and stone. Of the parts of the body, according to Ptolemy: the right ear, the spleen, the bladder, phlegm, the bones, and the internal hidden parts; according to Valens: the legs and knees, on account of Capricorn and Aquarius. He is the cause of injuries and afflictions arising from cold and moisture, such as dropsies, pains of the sinews, gout, cough, hernia, convulsions, difficulty of breathing, prolonged illness, consumption, moist humors, disturbance, rheumatic conditions, quartan fever attacks, chills, colic, diseases of the spleen, hysterical complaints, and all conditions arising from an excess of cold (f. 184v). He is also the cause of deaths by drowning, and those by hanging or bonds, and those arising from accidents proper to him. He is also the cause of storms and shipwrecks, and of the destruction of the fruits of the earth by waters, rains, flooding, or caterpillar, or locust, or hail. Concerning the state of the atmosphere, whenever he rules the preceding conjunction, he produces terrible, freezing, misty, and pestilential cold, as well as foul air, overcast skies, and an abundance of snowfalls that are not beneficial, but destructive.

cause and of benefit from immovable property and household management.

When Saturn is in conjunction with Mars, it is terrible for the body, and especially when one of them holds the application of the Moon or is lord of the sixth; for they stir up black bile and diseases from shivering fevers, and they are not favorable in transactions; for they are obstructive and cause failures in undertakings. They also scatter the paternal livelihood, because Saturn occupies the role of the paternal figure; so they also signify the premature death of the father. They either destroy the elder brothers or make them sickly, because Mars signifies the elder brothers; for Hermes is lord of the younger ones. Regarding their dispositions, they are inflexible and resentful. The evils will be worse if they are placed on the angles, since the stars are more powerful when angular, unless the aegis-bearer shall subdue their destructive strength.

Valens. The conjunction of Saturn and Mars caus[es]... and... 15 enmities and plots and unexpected dangers and judgments and various adversities, unless they are in their own houses or bounds or are beheld by Jupiter or Venus; yet even so they signify good fortunes unstably and sudden dangers.

When Saturn is with the Sun, and especially within three degrees, it brings a bad death upon the father (for both occupy the paternal role), 20 and destroys the paternal estate, and it is worse at night. But if the Sun is in fewer degrees and Saturn in more, the death of the father will be more grievous and all the aforementioned things more terrible. Ptolemy, however, says the opposite concerning this; for he says that Mars 25 following in succession harms the Sun, and Saturn harms the Moon, while Saturn overcoming the Sun and Mars overcoming the Moon. They are disease-causing through disturbances of humors and eye ailments. Those who have this configuration love an agricultural life and succeed in this alone, being otherwise ill-fated. But if Saturn 30 is also in a feminine sign or the Sun is in the house of Saturn and they are in conjunction thus, it makes the father distinguished, yet not wealthy.

Valens. The conjunction of Saturn and the Sun provides possessions and friendships along with envy; and it takes away and brings secret enmities it brings threats from great personages, as well as plots, and makes life subject to envy; yet one escapes most of them through dissimulation. He is not without resources, but is troubled and patient under injury and self-controlled in conducting himself amid accusations.

5 When Saturn is in conjunction with Venus, he grants unworthy marriage-beds with women, because Venus, which signifies the matters of marriage, is in company with an impure, blameworthy, and harmful star. Hence, for the most part, men are joined to barren women, or to persons who are disfigured and deserving of reproach, or to slaves; and from this there will be childlessness, scarcity of children, or lateness in having children, in accordance with the temperament of Saturn, and the emotional and unstable conditions of marriages.

Valens. The conjunction of Saturn and Venus is easily susceptible to plots concerning entanglements and unions, and is sympathetic and beneficial in matters of women, yet not to the end but only for a certain time, because they are perhaps mutually destructive of one another. It produces censure, deaths, separations, and instabilities.

15 When Saturn is with Mercury, he is the cause of falsehood, treachery, and deceitfulness. Such people, he says, are not believed even when they speak the truth; for Mercury governs speech, while Saturn governs hypocrisy and deception. Such people are also difficult to deal with; for they reject Saturn in their actions; and they will be deeply wicked and meddlesome.

20 Valens. The conjunction of Saturn and Mercury makes men active, but brings slanders through secret means, and judgments and debts and disturbances through writings or transactions; yet it does not make them unintelligent or inactive.

When Saturn is with the Moon, he causes disease; for the Moon governs the body. And since she also signifies the mother, he will be destructive of maternal figures and of the mother's livelihood. The activities will be feeble, because she too has dominion over all activity. And these things apply at night; for the malefics, when causing harm, cause it more severely when they are also contrary to sect; so that at night, whether she is waxing or waning in light and is harmed by Saturn, even if the two benefics bear witness, they will not reverse the evils. But during the day, when she is waxing in light and the benefics are looking on, there will be a restraint of the evils.

Valens. The] 5 and "those present together are makers of benefits from properties and foundations and deaths and shipping, and especially at the full moon.

makers of righteousness of arable land and vine plantings and foundations and houses (for Saturn rules over these), and of guardianship and inheritance; for in general the conjunction and the trine configuration produce the same effects. When Mercury is combined with these, it grants civic offices on account of its sociable nature, or will make them keepers of secrets. In cardinal signs especially will the civic offices occur, for then the zodiac sign concurs with the nature of the star, since we also call the cardinal signs civic. Or they become tax collectors of kings, when Mercury is at midheaven in trine with Saturn and Jupiter; for the midheaven seems to correspond to the royal person. I say also that when the Sun looks on, others are sent as ambassadors on behalf of their homeland, and often they also raise other people's children. This being the case with Saturn, Jupiter, and Mercury, if Mars looks on in square or opposition, it stirs up envy and slanders and losses, because the passionate and tyrannical nature is arrayed against the rational quality of Mercury and the administrative and honorable quality of Saturn and Jupiter.

If Jupiter is in square aspect to Saturn, and Saturn is in superior position (f. 185), that is, is on the right side, property is diminished; for the malefic is found more powerful on account of the superior position; hence it also inflates matters and causes opposition of counsel; and it harms the father and destroys the paternal inheritance; and this applies in both square aspects, but is worse when Saturn is in superior position. But if Jupiter is in superior position to Saturn, the harm is lesser; † for it grants the father a certain equal measure of renown and the child a partial advancement of life as time proceeds.

When Saturn regards Jupiter in opposition, it is harmful regarding actions and grieves parents on account of children. And if Saturn is on the ascendant while Jupiter is setting, the first part of life is unfortunate and the last part fortunate; but if Jupiter is on the ascendant while Saturn is setting, the first part is fortunate and the last part unfortunate — for it seems that the ascendant signifies the beginnings of life, the midheaven the middle, and the setting the final part. From these things it is clear that the benefics in trines, sextiles, and conjunctions are harmed less by the malefics, but in squares and oppositions to a greater degree.

When Jupiter is in sextile aspect to Saturn, the same indications as the trine configuration are shown, though weaker.

When Saturn is in trine to Mars, it is productive of prosperity, success, and authority. For the trine and sextile aspects intensify the power of the benefics, while they blunt the malice of the malefics. Therefore, even if Jupiter does not aspect, they fare well, except that they witness the death of elder brothers, because Mars, signifying brothers, is harmed by Saturn; and if Mercury also testifies, they will witness the death of younger brothers as well.

10 When Mars is in square to Saturn, with Saturn overcoming by superior position, it makes men dreadful in body, feverish, and frequently ill, ineffective, and destroys their paternal property; they also bury their own wives. When Mars overcomes Saturn by superior position, the father dies before the mother. In matters of daily life this configuration is active; nevertheless, the paternal property is lost in either case; such persons are also envied by their own kin.

When Saturn is in opposition to Mars, it is unfavorable for the acquisition of a livelihood. The configuration indicates envy, want, bodily afflictions, dangers to life, childlessness, enmity of kin, strife, swift death of the father, toil upon toil or hardship upon hardship; in watery signs, shipwrecks and dangers from rivers or currents; in bestial signs, harm and danger from wild beasts or the drinking of poison; in four-footed signs, falls from such animals. And it is worse when they are lords of the Moon's domicile: in the angles they bring death, in the succedent houses they deprive one of good hopes and in the middle period of life bring ruin; in the cadent houses they cause less harm, yet still bring grief and reversals; and some they render wanderers abroad or freedmen formerly enslaved, when in angles in opposition, for they are the cause of great dangers when in mutual opposition; for both being malefics, they intensify the evil through such a configuration.

When Saturn forms a trine aspect with the Sun, it contributes to advancement in life, fame, and distinguished offices, especially in masculine signs and by day; for the masculine signs are commanding and active, just as the feminine are more passive and subordinate. The father's life too will be illustrious. By night there will likewise be prosperity, yet the paternal estates are not preserved to the end, since all planets contrary to sect are unstable and bring about dissolutions.

When Saturn forms a square aspect with the Sun and Saturn is in the superior position, there will be a ruin of livelihood or convulsion regarding the father, and he will die before the mother as well; regarding the birth or the native, it brings errors in life and insults from many people, and upon the body it brings diseases from chills and fevers on account of the mixture of the Sun, and especially also from chills. They are also thwarted in whatever enterprises they undertake. When the Sun is in the superior position over Saturn, the paternal inheritance is scattered and there will be enmity toward family members; the impulses of the mind and one's actions are dimmed, plans are cut short, various diseases occur at different times along with bodily hardships in early life, and one's life is not distinguished in one's homeland.

When Saturn is in opposition to the Sun, with Jupiter not in aspect, the father is burdensome and miserly, or harmful; he is also wasteful with his estate and destructive, one who squanders even what has been left behind, or he will die an evil death. For the child, there will be continual toil, and more so in a feminine sign.

When Saturn is in trine with Venus, it makes people stable, dignified, and conspicuous, and harmed by those of lower station, yet not quick to marry.

When Saturn is in square and in superior position, there are falls from fortune, losses, and sorrows from female persons. Such people are also without grace and unlucky in their affairs. But when Venus overcomes Saturn in superior position, the women they will marry will be blameless, though having somewhat less of a stern and commanding nature, yet loving what concerns the husband and preserving goodwill toward him. But secretly they will be with one another in their desire†.

When Saturn is in opposition to Venus, it produces some who are licentious and indecent, others who are without women, or who marry women held in common and debased, or mutilated, or slaves; and these too are without grace.

Saturn in trine with Mercury [the B] will make people intelligent and prudent, firm in reasoning and steadfast; their occupations will come from words, or writings, or calculations, or commerce, from which their livelihood will be sufficient and adequate.

A square [aspect] dominating Mercury is especially contrary; it cuts off plans and brings cooling/freezing to actions; and those persons themselves subjected to other persons, and it indicates envious/malicious individuals. And some will be lisping or speaking with difficulty and stammering, or growling, or deaf. When Mercury dominates Saturn, the configuration is not good; nevertheless the affliction is weaker.

5 Saturn in opposition to Mercury produces people who are slow of speech and have difficulty in utterance, or who stammer, especially when Mercury is under the sun's rays or in a mute sign; and it is especially worse if in addition to these things the Moon is in conjunction with Mercury or Saturn. The configuration will not in every case have the power to produce muteness or defective speech; for this will occur when Mercury is lord of the injurious place and is in opposition to Saturn — for being master of speech, it naturally produces the aforementioned effects when harmed by Saturn. When Mars, however, looks on, the affliction is dissolved, but they will be wretched, and although intelligent and knowledgeable, they do not benefit from this nor acquire anything from this cause, but are always gloomy and conceited. For the most part they are also older than their siblings; and if some are born before them, they will die; and the father dies before the mother.

The trine of Saturn and the Moon grants instability and makes the native known to kings and illustrious, especially if the Moon is waxing; but if she is waning, the aforementioned effects will be more moderate.

The square of Saturn in superior position brings the mother to an evil death, and upon the native frequent illnesses, especially from fluxes, particularly if Saturn is in a feminine sign. And if marriage is otherwise destined for the nativity, the wife will not be well-disposed toward him; the configuration is dangerous regarding children. If the Moon is in the tenth from Saturn, it destroys the maternal property and stirs up fluxes, and the children will be enemies to their mothers. The configuration is also a cause of inactivity.

The opposition of Saturn and the Moon destroys the maternal estate and inflicts hidden sufferings upon the mother herself, or she will be ill-tempered and wretched. If no benefic looks upon it, the configuration is terrible regarding bodily matters; for it signifies danger according to the nature of the signs: if they are in four-footed signs, danger from four-footed creatures; if in bestial signs, from similar creatures; if in watery signs, from waters and ill humors. And if no assistance is present, it also causes injury: for some have their eyes dimmed, others have their limbs broken; and some are driven from their homeland, since the Moon also signifies the homeland.

It should be known that such effects, namely those arising from bodily conjunctions and those from the configurations of the stars with one another, are brought to completion chiefly at those times when the ascensions of these stars or their periods are fulfilled, either by themselves or in combination with one another. For example, let there be a nativity in the second climate. The Sun in Taurus, the Ascendant in Sagittarius, the Moon in Cancer, Saturn in Leo, Jupiter in Capricorn, Mars in Scorpio, Venus in Scorpio. In the thirty-fourth year, then, the death of a wife occurred; for the square of Saturn and Venus, with Saturn in superior position, as now, brings harm and grief from women. The timing is reasonable: for Leo has 19 degrees, where Saturn is, and Scorpio, where Venus is, has 15; together 34 years. For the periods were taken from the ruling stars of Leo and Scorpio. But when reckoned from the ascensions, in the 36th year, having been accused of plotting against his wife, he was about to be in danger and was sent into exile; for Saturn in superior position over Venus also causes banishments and bereavements through female persons. The timing was indicated by the ascensional arc of Leo, in which Saturn is; for the stars indicate the effective time both individually and in combination.By reason of the square of Saturn to Venus, then, he was about to be in danger, and the cause lay in the configuration with Venus; but since Jupiter also regarded Venus, he was going to escape the danger; and indeed Venus in Scorpio indicated the 36 years. In the 37th year he also enjoyed greater good fortune on account of the opposition of the Moon and Jupiter: the Moon 25 and Jupiter 12, together 37.

And again: Sun, Mars, Venus in Sagittarius, Moon in Libra, Saturn in Aquarius (?), Jupiter in Virgo, Mercury in Scorpio, ascendant in Capricorn. In the 19th year the father died a violent death; for the period of the Sun was effective in such an outcome because it joined Mars; for Mars together with the Sun signifies a bad death for the father. They themselves suffer damage to the eyes and encounter dangers. All of which came to pass; for the father died violently in the 19th year, and he himself was injured in the eyes and, having gone abroad, faced danger at sea. For in Sagittarius is the ship Argo. It has been stated that even if the stars are placed two together or aspect each other by configuration, nevertheless the period or rising of each will also act independently and together with [that of] the one placed upon it ἢ

1 The following examples of nativities, one of which is not suited to this place, since Saturn plays no role in it, I believe are taken from a book such as the collection of nativities of Antigonus of Nicaea (Philol., N. F., XI, 125). 2 τά] τῶν M. 10 →] τῶ M. i.e. the lords of Leo and Scorpio are Sun and Mars, whose minimum periods are XIX and XV years respectively (cf. Firm. 74, 6 sqq.; cod. of the planet in aspect; and that will take effect which the comparison of both indicates. Since, therefore, the Sun signifies both homeland and eyesight, both came to pass, especially since the Sun was being harmed by malefics in its injurious and ophthalmological places, but in the 20th year by divine providence he regained his sight; for Venus was also present with the Sun and Jupiter was looking from a square; and the 20 years were indicated by Virgo through its lord Mercury, in which Jupiter was looking at the Sun. But also Jupiter 12 and Venus from a square 8 — for both were looking upon the affliction of the eyes. And the benefics prevailed because they were found in more influential places. The said effects operate also in the anniversary charts; for one must observe the lord of the year, to what planets it forms aspects by transit, and especially if it preserves the same configuration as at birth. One must also observe the ingresses.

On Jupiter.

15 Jupiter is the cause of the begetting of children, desire, knowledge, introduction, friendship from persons of superior rank, gifts, prosperity, office and glory, superintendence of sacred things, mediation, trust, guardianship, priesthood, justice, release from evils, abundance of fruits, inheritance, adoption, freedom, modesty, dignity, magnanimity, peace, affection, benevolence, good seasons, plenty, bodily and spiritual well-being, benefaction from kings, health, abundance of crops, and prosperous voyages of fleets. It signifies persons of middle age and of honorable standing. It is the cause of ailments when afflicted and bears relation to the place of death: of quinsy, pneumonia, apoplexy, convulsions, headache, and cardiac conditions. Of the parts of the body it rules, according to Ptolemy: touch, the lungs, semen, and the arteries; but according to Vettius Valens, on the exterior: the thighs and feet because of Sagittarius and Pisces, whence it also bestows running in contests; on the interior: the organs of generation, the womb, the liver, the right side, and the teeth; and its substance is tin. Yet it also produces a later diminution of one's estate, and is generally irregular in matters of livelihood and character.

Jupiter with Mars is the cause of advancement and acquisition and civic honors and leadership of the people and successive achievements. But if these planets are in conjunction in the house of Jupiter or Mars, they signify powerful rulers over their own arms; the proper arms of Jupiter are scepters, and those of Mars are the spear, bow, and sword.

Jupiter with the Sun, if he be under the rays, there will be a scarcity of all good things; but if he be out of the rays, there will be good fortune and acquisition of livelihood and benefit; those born under these conditions are born to the good fortune of their parents and have their pleasures from infancy.

Jupiter with Venus displays that which is honorable and adorned with graces and friendship from many, and that which is benevolent and pious and refined and desired among rulers and well-spoken of and illustrious. These people also increase their livelihood through distinguished persons and women, or they take charge of sacred things; and they are especially given to love and enter into relations with many women, and are fortunate in marriage and in children, unless Saturn and Mars look on. The same consideration applies also in the case of women, when Jupiter is with Venus in powerful places, if the Moon aspects them and Mars bears witness from some position, the reproach of the union will concern related persons, as it seems, on account of the kinship of the signs. For Cancer is the exaltation of Jupiter, the trine of Venus, and the house of the Moon; and Pisces is the exaltation of Venus, the house of Jupiter, and the trine of Mars and the Moon.

of Valens. The conjunction of Jupiter and Venus is productive of glory, acquisitions, gifts, and bodily adornment, as well as of the begetting of children, high priesthood, and the wearing of garlands, the leadership of crowds, honor in images, but irregular in matters of marriage and children; it is also productive of the wearing of gold.

When Jupiter is with Mercury, it signifies good counsel and power in speech and excellence in intellect, by which qualities they are also most distinguished in the city; for they become grammarians or secretaries of kings, as well as orators and sophists.

Of Valens. The conjunction of Jupiter and Mercury produces administrators and managers of affairs, trusted men, and those commended through their words or calculations, and through their education agreeable and pleasing. But if they are also found in a money-making sign, they also become discoverers of treasures and derive profit from deposits and loans.

When Jupiter is with the Moon, it brings increase of fortune and great wealth, provided it is visible and of the preferred sect and in a stronger place; for it also makes the native superior to his parents. But in a nocturnal nativity, provided the Moon is of more degrees. 35 and it may dim one's fortune and make it lesser.

When Jupiter is in trine with Mars, he grants offices and honors from rulers and makes men effective.

When in superior square, he is the cause of glory, esteem, renown, and honor; some move in royal courts, others are engaged in military service, and others conduct public affairs. He is not a good guardian of paternal possessions and livelihood; he also causes grief regarding children, for he produces either childlessness or few children. Mars in superior square to Jupiter makes men rash in their impulses, failing in life, and toiling in vain in royal services and affairs or in public ones, from which slanders and accusations arise.

When Jupiter is in opposition to Mars, he brings about every irregularity and disruption of life and turns friends into enemies, and reasonably so; for Jupiter is the cause of peace, while Mars is the cause of anger and rage, and the opposition aspect is hostile. It portends afflictions arising from rashness and confusion of reasoning.

The trine of Jupiter and the Sun is the cause of wealth, glory, marriage, procreation, and a distinguished life.

The square of Jupiter and the Sun, when Jupiter is superior, is the cause of the greatest advancement and good standing for both father and son, and furthermore of superiority over the many. But if the Sun overcomes Jupiter by tenth-house position, the father will be exceedingly illustrious, yet his possessions will diminish; for they are shared with the city or the people, and sometimes even his enemies inherit his property.

25 The opposition of Jupiter and the Sun is destructive to paternal properties, and the child will be subordinate to a lesser man.

The trine of Jupiter and Venus makes people gracious and beloved, prospering through women and friends.

The square of Jupiter and Venus, when Jupiter predominates, makes people friends of many, having sales and profits from female persons, very refined and most god-fearing; but if Venus predominates over Jupiter, they will be amorous, having a beautiful disposition toward women, pleasure-loving and fond of adornment, yet not so successful in the pursuit of their undertakings; for in these matters it is better that Venus be overcome by Jupiter.

The opposition of Jupiter and Venus is not good for advancement in life; for such people there is no true friend, but saying one thing and plotting in secret, from which they will also face uprising and will receive bad recompense from these. In other matters, however, they will be fortunate and will have a sufficient livelihood; and toward their lawful wives they are unstable, but in relations with other women they are successful.

The trine of Jupiter and Mercury makes men of deep intellect, very wise and practical, venerable and renowned in the city, honored by many, entrusted as secretaries or with public administrative offices by kings, and blameless in their conduct.

but others are devotees of the ethereal stars;

This is likely to occur when the configuration falls in the 9th place. Jupiter overcoming Mercury signifies secretaries, directors of accounts, and bookkeepers; those whose livelihood and occupation will derive from public administration. But if Mercury overcomes Jupiter, they are not without means in life, yet through their poor judgment they accomplish many contrary things, and they turn away from good things as though they were worthless — what others pray to obtain, these men are unwilling to receive, and they flee even from good things that come to them of their own accord, and they are ungrateful for the benefits bestowed upon them.

The opposition of Jupiter and Mercury is unfavorable for those devoted to literary pursuits; for it signifies the uprising and anger of crowds, or slanders born of envy directed toward those of higher station, as well as the death of siblings and lawsuits and disputes with relatives.

The trine of Jupiter and the Moon makes men glorious and prudent. They will be leaders or judges when the configuration is in the place of Jupiter; orators, when in the place of Mercury; armed soldiers, when in the place of Mars, or they associate with persons of such a kind. For if the Moon is waxing in light, they will be commanding soldiers; but if she is waning in light, they will be servants of the leaders. And in all the remaining cases — that is, in matters both greater and lesser — one must make a similar distinction.

The square of Jupiter and the Moon, with Jupiter positioned by night and day over both the mother and himself, will grant occupation and livelihood; and he will be superior to his own family in honor, appointed to the presidency of the people, bearing a great name and widespread fame in the city. But if the Moon decimates Jupiter, it signifies glory and support among ruling persons; yet in the progression of time it will bring some diminishment and inactivity at a certain moment. 35

The opposition of Jupiter and the Moon, when she is waxing in light, is a cause of presidency and a distinguished life. For he will be commanding, impetuous in character, and yielding to no one else; and all the more so when the Moon surpasses Jupiter by being at a greater number of degrees. But when she is waning in light, she will diminish what has been said and will bring many failures upon his life.

Concerning Mars.

They say that Mars is the cause of violence, tyranny, plunder, military service, weapons, wars, killings of men, strife, turmoil, clamor, treachery, insolence, captivity, adultery, flight, downfalls, lies, theft, banditry, dissolution of friendships, anger, rage, enmity, lawsuits, murders, bloodshed, boldness, rashness, sharpness, audacity, love of danger, burnings, wounds and cuts from iron, arson, wandering, living abroad, perjury, sacrilege, villainy, shamelessness, hunting, arrogance, insubordination, contempt, cruelty; and there arise also drunkards, the merciless, brawlers, lovers of tumult, atheists, those who hate their homes; he is also responsible for sedition and civil wars, enslavement, uprisings, the wrath of rulers, sudden deaths and every lawlessness.

When well-placed, he grants commands over soldiers and positions of leadership. With regard to the air, he is the cause of heat waves and hot winds, pestilences, wasting diseases, whirlwinds, thunderbolts, drought; with regard to the seas, of sudden shipwrecks from disorderly winds or thunderbolts; with regard to rivers and springs, of water scarcity; and he is the cause of destruction of crops from scorching flames or locusts or the shaking of winds, or from the combustion in storehouses.

He indicates persons of vigorous prime; of the parts of the body he governs, according to Ptolemy, the hearing, the left side, the kidneys, the veins and the genitals, and according to Valens the head, the seat, the genitals, the blood, the bile, the excretion of waste matter, and the posterior parts. He causes ailments such as falls from heights or from four-footed animals, fainting spells, apoplexy, tertian fevers and semi-tertian periodic fevers, kidney diseases, spitting of blood, hemorrhages, miscarriages, erysipelas, sudden blows and all conditions arising from excessive inflammation of heat. He grants crafts involving fire and iron; and he is lord of the substance of iron, and on account of Aries, of fine garments, wine, and legumes.

When Mars is in conjunction with the Sun, it signifies that the father will die quickly or die badly; and if Mars is also on an angle or returning, it is worse. If but if he has no father, it will befall his uncle or whoever he holds in the position of a father; likewise also with regard to the mother. Frequent dangers surround the native; some have also suffered harm to their eyes, or their body is afflicted by iron and fire; others suffer from madness and mental derangement. The paternal estate is scattered.

In conjunction with Venus, they produce the same effects as the squares.

In conjunction with Mercury, they make men liars, but intelligent and highly experienced in many things, concerned above all with lawsuits and acts of cunning; some become gymnasts, athletes, charioteers, and through these pursuits become distinguished, provided the benefics look on; yet they will be pederasts, and if Saturn looks on, it will bring upon them much reproach in these matters.

«Valens». The conjunction of Mars and Venus. [Those born under it are] unstable in their judgments, intemperate, and jealous, though having many friends, indifferent in their sexual unions, and malicious; it produces, through female persons, poisonings, lawsuits, slanders, and disturbances.

But if Mars and Mercury are in conjunction and are found to be under the rays of the Sun and at some angle, and the Moon furthermore aspects them, they will be malicious and liars, having the manner of robbers, and moreover forgers; and if they are <seen> by Jupiter, (f. 189) they succeed in these things; but if by Saturn, they are exposed and suffer terribly.

When Mars is with the Moon, it makes [the native] passionate and not hard to provoke, and especially when angular; some are short-lived, others are maimed, and they fall into dangers; others die a violent death or are cut down by the sword, unless Jupiter looks on. And the mother will also be sickly.

When Mars is in trine with the Sun, it makes those born rulers; but the rule will be better if in a nocturnal nativity the Sun holds the right side and Mars the left; then the Sun overcomes Mars and produces powerful rulers. And if in addition Jupiter is also in trine with it and angular, while the Moon is in a favorable place, then they become lords of life and death.

When Mars overcomes the Sun from a square, it always harms and envelops one in diseases and opposes advancement. But if the Sun decimates Mars, it is destructive both to the native and to his father; for it brings very many failures, deprives one of property, brings madness upon some, and has weakened the eyes of others; and it is worse in a diurnal nativity. When Mars is in opposition to the Sun, it is destructive to the father or also damages the eyes; and for the native, danger from a fall and many adversities. And these things apply by day, but by night, weakness and ruin of livelihood.

When Mars is in trine with Venus, it bestows prosperity and a fortunate marriage bed; it makes one fond of adornment, high-minded, and eager to pursue the beds of many women.

When Mars overcomes Venus, it signifies lawsuits, conflicts, and losses 5 on account of women; but if they are in tropical signs, the native will be a man-married sodomite, effeminate, and licentious. If they have the measures of life, they will cooperate in the adultery of their own wives or, knowing of it, will endure it; but if the nativity is that of a woman, she likewise will endure much grief over her husband's intercourse with other women. But if Venus decimates Mars, it produces the same results, except covertly and not openly.

Mars in opposition to Venus produces vagabonds and unstable persons; and Venus is maleficent both in marriage and in children. But if they are also in tropical signs, it produces the same effects as the squares.

The trine of Mars and Mercury makes men active and intelligent and 15 successful in councils, and sharp in their undertakings; these men also increase their livelihood through letters, education, and eloquence.

Mars decimating Mercury is a cause of many terrible things, bringing captivity and hindering activities, and providing slanders and accusations; and more so by day, but less so by night.

Mars in opposition to Mercury produces forgers and those involved in poisons, who become entangled in sureties and debts. Wherefore, he says, they often shun the trust of honest men and are judged before rulers on these accounts and endure fears. And some are even driven from their homeland, especially if they are in the bounds of Saturn or in their own bounds, or if Mercury is in its own signs.

Mars being in trine with the Moon when she is waning makes people active, easily prevailing in the actions they desire; and if Jupiter also looks on, they are commanding, illustrious, and very powerful; but when the Moon is increasing in light by day, it is troublesome for both livelihood and body.

Mars decimating the Moon casts the mother into widowhood or diminishes her livelihood; and some mothers are killed by blood or an evil death. (f. 189') Those afflicted with madness take refuge in temples, especially when Mars is in the bounds of Saturn and the Moon is in the bounds of Mars or Mercury; for often the power of the bounds either intensifies or relaxes the influence.

Mars in opposition to the Moon makes people short-lived and brings frequent dangers; for some are unmarried, others bury their wives, and the end of these people is bad; for it brings madness or mutilation of limbs or imprisonment.

On the Sun.

The Sun is the cause of the soul's perception and intellect, of kingship, leadership, eminence, divine oracles, public affairs, guardianship, popular authority, fathers, masters, images, statues, crowns, high priesthood, and homeland. Of the parts of the body it governs the right eyes, the brain, the heart, the sinews, and all things on the right side; but according to Valens, the head, the sense organs, the right eye, the heart, the sinews, the ribs, and in terms of substance, gold, and the produce of wheat and barley.

In conjunction with Venus evening-eastern by night, or morning-eastern by day, it produces distinguished and capable people. But if she is evening by day, or morning by night, it produces middling people. This conjunction is also generous and successful in undertakings, especially in the leadership of crowds, though not without grief in matters concerning women and children, particularly when the Moon is under the rays of the Sun.

Being with Mercury at morning rising and evening setting, it produces learned men or scribes who grow wealthy through their intelligence and prosper and rule over others.

Such a co-presence, according to Valens, † makes people popular and hypocritical and versatile and active in public places, critical and lovers of fine things and pious toward god, beneficent and fond of familiar company, self-sufficient, boldly timid yet bearing whatever befalls them with nobility, but difficult to attain in matters of reputation and uneven in their livelihood, having ups and downs, yet not entirely without resources.

The trine of the Sun and Moon, the figure being right; nonetheless one must look to the testimonies of the stars.

The Sun and Moon in square in the angular houses, when aspected by Jupiter, are causes of action, reputation, and standing; but when aspected by malefics, they are troublesome both for livelihood and for life itself. But if they are indeed aspected by malefics, yet the Moon is in conjunction with Jupiter, they make men brilliant, though subject to envy.

On Venus.

Venus is the cause of love and desire; she also signifies mother and wife, and all appetite, licentiousness, and pleasure, as well as priesthood, gymnasium-leadership, the wearing of gold, the wearing of garlands, marriage, erotic unions, and every bodily indulgence and enjoyment, and elegance of adornment, sloth, cheerfulness, variety, the craft of dyeing, painting, ivory-working, anointing with perfumes, and the pure arts and those derived from precious stones, and the benefits, advancement, and honours from queens or noblewomen, love of the flesh, laughter, dancing, hatred of evil, love of god, bodily comeliness, good constitution, affection, beneficence, compassion, success, and all manner of gracefulness. (f.190) When afflicted, she signifies adultery, poisoning, indolence, effeminate madness, reproaches, censures, and shameful acts; but when well-placed she is the cause of glory and acquisition. With regard to the atmosphere, she produces moist and nourishing winds, temperate conditions, clear air, fair weather, abundant rains of fertile waters, smooth sailing on the seas, success of fleets, profit, full risings of rivers, abundance of fruits, and fertility.Of the parts of the body she governs the sense of smell, the liver, and the flesh; but according to Valens, the neck, the face, the lips, the generative parts, and internally the lung. Of diseases she governs all gastric and hepatic and dysenteric conditions, ailments, lichens, spreading ulcers, fistulas, the drinking of drugs, and all conditions that arise from an excess or corruption of moisture; of material things she governs precious stones, feminine adornment, and varied entertainment, and in respect of produce, the olive.

The conjunction of Venus and Mercury is harmonious; for it makes people talkative, witty, and charming, fond of friends and beauty, and attentive to education and temperance, as well as generous in giving and receiving, and occupied with purchases. All these things are either intensified or relaxed according to the topical determination and the phase of the stars. With regard to women, he is inconstant and easily changing his mind. Venus and Mercury overcoming each other produce refined men skilled in craft or learning and distinguished on account of these, yet censured for amorous conduct.

The conjunction of Venus and the Moon is good with respect to glory and acquisition, but with regard to marital agreements it is inconstant, full of rivalry, and hostile; for it brings about acts of malice and disturbances from relatives or friends. Moreover, it is not good with respect to children or health, and it makes property unstable and brings on mental disorders.

Venus decimating the Moon under favorable conditions will bestow good things, and activity, and a fine manner of life, and affection among women, and joy, and a pleasant and sweet life in social intercourse; yet they are unstable in their unions; and their mothers are dignified in character, but marry twice.

Venus (opposing the Moon) is not favorable for marriage; for in general Venus in square or opposition to the Moon in every matter produces jealousy. It signifies childlessness; for even if children are born, they die. And on account of women they are insulted and suffer terrible things.

Concerning Mercury. 10

Mercury is the cause of literary education, speech, argumentation, sophistry, rhetoric, geometry, astronomy, understanding, calculation, brotherhood, service, messages, gain, discoveries, voice training, wrestling practice, judgment of seals, all transactions and commerce, letters, younger children, contrivances, and quick actions. He is lord of the rational part of the soul; and he produces gymnasts, modelers, sculptors, sacred craftsmen, physicians, lawyers, grammarians, calculators, philosophers, diviners, sacrificers, augurs, musicians, architects, interpreters of dreams, weavers, methodists, and those sent on public missions and embassies, sacred ministers, temple wardens, men of intelligence, benefactors, men of wide learning, experienced persons, men of good natural ability, natural philosophers, men of good aim, and men who achieve their goals; but in the contrary disposition he produces rogues, reckless persons, forgetful persons, frivolous persons, persons easily changed, foolish villains, senseless persons, liars, unstable persons, untrustworthy persons, greedy persons, unjust persons, and in general persons who are unsound in their understanding.

When well-configured with Saturn, [it brings] deceitful, thievish, and larcenous persons, as well as ambushers and those quick to do evil; it also brings forgeries, unlawful acts, and notorious infamy.

Afflicted with respect to seas, it is productive of difficult voyages, and is also effective regarding the matter of priestly discourse and religious rites and royal revenues, and the alteration of customs and laws for better or worse according to the times. With respect to the air, it stirs up sharp and irregular winds, changeable in nature, and is productive of thunder, lightning, chasms, and earthquakes. It signifies young persons. Of the bodily

Over substances it rules bronze and every kind of coin.

Mercury in square with Jupiter makes judges or rulers of cities.

Mercury with Mars is ill-omened regarding deposits; for those who receive them deny having done so.

10 The conjunction of Mercury and the Moon is favorable with regard to fame and the establishment of relations with men and women, and for strength in education and speech, and concerning the remaining undertakings and dealings — sociable, skilled in mechanical arts, versatile and industrious, yet not persevering in actions or opinions, and irregular in life.

15 But if Mercury aspects the Sun by the tenth house, it makes men terrible, villainous, rapacious, lying in wait for the persons of others and betraying and slandering them and stripping them of their possessions.

Mercury aspecting the Moon by the tenth house is excellent for speech and understanding, but brings grief through the favor of the crowd and the multitude. And if a malefic planet further overcomes Mercury, he will experience imprisonment and bonds on account of certain written matters.

Mercury in opposition to the Moon stirs up seditions, disturbances, and outcries from the multitude; and it says that such persons are cowardly and lacking in confidence.

On the Moon.

The Moon is the cause of the constitution of bodies and mistress of the sensitive part of the soul; it signifies life, conception, mother, form and the shaping of the body, cohabitation, domesticity, city, mistress, wealth, receipts, expenditures, ship, house, sojourn abroad, wandering, and the gathering of crowds. Of the parts of the body it governs taste, swallowing, the stomach, the belly, the womb, the left eye and all things on the left side; according to Valens, also the breasts and the spleen, whence it also causes dropsy. Of substances it governs silver.

(G.191.) The Moon decimating Mars brings ill repute to the mother and scarcity of livelihood, and to him wanderings and the ruin of fortune.

The Moon decimating Venus will grant prosperity, but always harms men through female persons, and brings censure upon women.

EXCERPTA EX CODICE 7 (Marc. cccxxxv)

Stephani philosophi de arte mathematica.

Haec Stephani excerpta in primis nobis digna visa sunt quae ederentur, cum nos doceant quemadmodum astrologia a christianis diu neglecta, immo damnata, Constantinopoli instaurata ac renovata sit. Nam " beata urbs quae in medio quinto climate sita est " Byzantium esse nemo est qui neget (cf. Martian. Capell., VIII, 876). Ex ipsius libelli verbis aetas, qua ortus sit, accuratius definiri posse videtur; scilicet eum multo post Mahommedanae sectae exortum (p. 182, v. 19, τοῖς Σαρακηνικοῖς ἔτεσι), cum " Agarenorum " sive Arabum imperium iam labefactum erat (p. 182, v. 31) scriptum esse apparet. Quae ineunti saeculo VIII optime conveniunt, cum Leo Isaurus (717-741) Arabes ex Asia Minore eiecit atque Ommiadarum domus eversa est. Eo autem ipso tempore astronomica studia Byzanti revixisse aliunde scimus (Boll, Sitzungsb. Akad. München, 1899, p. 105). Verba quoque (p. 182, v. 13) ὡς καὶ πέντε μοίρας παραλλάττειν in argumentum advocari posse me monuit Fr. Boll, e quibus verbis apparet a tempore scriptoris usque ad Ptolemaei quinque fere saecula numeranda esse vel certe scriptorem credidisse Ptolemaeum circa quingentos annos ante se ipsum floruisse. Certe auctor huius opusculi Stephanus Alexandrinus esse non potest, qui ineunte saeculo septimo scientias omnes Constantinopoli professus est. Attamen non crediderim haec falsario tribuenda esse — totus enim orationis color fiduciam inicit — quamvis anno 775 prophetia de fine Mohammedanorum Stephano illi supposita sit (Usener, De Stephano Alexandrino, p. 13), sed potius " Stephanum philosophum ", qui haec composuit, ab altero diversum esse. Ipse nos certiores facit (p. 182, v. 2) se ex Persia, ubi et ante et post dominationem Arabum astrologia semper viguit, hanc artem Romanis attulisse vel potius rettulisse. F. C.

EXCERPTS FROM CODEX 7 (MARC. CCCXXXV)

Of Stephen the philosopher on the mathematical art.

These excerpts of Stephen seemed to us especially worthy of publication, since they teach us how astrology, long neglected and indeed condemned by Christians, was restored and renewed at Constantinople. For there is no one who would deny that "the blessed city situated in the middle of the fifth climate" is Byzantium (cf. Martian. Capell., VIII, 876). From the words of the booklet itself, the age at which it arose seems to be more precisely determinable; namely, it is apparent that it was written long after the rise of the Mohammedan sect (p. 182, v. 19, τοῖς Σαρακηνικοῖς ἔτεσι), when the empire of the Agarenes, or Arabs, was already in decline (p. 182, v. 31). This fits very well with the early eighth century, when Leo the Isaurian (717–741) drove the Arabs out of Asia Minor and the house of the Ommayads was overthrown. Moreover, we know from other sources that astronomical studies revived at Byzantium at that very time (Boll, Sitzungsb. Akad. München, 1899, p. 105). Fr. Boll also pointed out to me that the words (p. 182, v. 13) ὡς καὶ πέντε μοίρας παραλλάττειν can be adduced as evidence, from which it appears that from the time of the writer roughly five centuries must be counted back to Ptolemy, or at least that the writer believed Ptolemy had flourished some five hundred years before himself.Certainly the author of this little work cannot be Stephanus of Alexandria, who taught all the sciences at Constantinople at the beginning of the seventh century. However, I would not believe that this should be attributed to a forger — for the entire tone of the writing inspires confidence, although in the year 775 a prophecy concerning the end of the Mohammedans was attributed to that Stephanus (Usener, De Stephano Alexandrino, p.13) — but rather that "Stephanus the philosopher" who composed these things was a different person from the other. He himself informs us (p. 182, v. 2) that he brought, or rather restored, this art to the Romans from Persia, where astrology always flourished both before and after the Arab domination. G. G.

G. 25. Ζ'. Of Stephen the Philosopher on the mathematical art and on the peoples who have used it; against those who say it is sinful; on the fact that he who does not accept it errs; on its usefulness; and on the fact that it is more honorable than all the arts.

On the mathematical art.

Since the course of time and the vicissitude of the ages sometimes introduce certain branches of learning, while others are consigned to complete oblivion

The first chapter I described myself; the rest I received from the distinguished Daniel Riccoboni.

σάρκες καὶ ἡ τοῦ λύκου κόπρος καὶ τὸ ἐλατήριον καὶ ἡ ἀσκαμμωνία καὶ ἡ ἐντεριώνη — ταῦτα γὰρ λόγῳ μὲν ἰατρικῷ προσφερόμενα τὰ μέγιστα λυσιτελεῖ, κατὰ δὲ ἄλλον λυμαντικὰ καὶ φθοροποιὰ γίγνεται — οὕτω δὴ καὶ ἡ ἀστρονομία εὐσεβεῖ λογισμῷ λαμβανομένη πρὸς κατάληψιν τῶν (f. 26r) οὐρανίων κινήσεων καὶ θέσεων καὶ τῶν σχηματισμῶν, ἔτι δὲ καὶ τῶν μελλόντων ἐπισυμβαίνειν ἀγαθῶν ἢ φαύλων, πρὸς δοξολογίαν αἵρει τοῦ δημιουργοῦ καὶ τὸν νοῦν ταῖς θείαις θεωρίαις ἀναπτεροῖ πρὸς τὴν ἄνω λαμπρότητα· εἰ δέ τις ταύτῃ χρήσαιτο καθάπερ οἱ Ἕλληνες, δοξάζων θεοὺς εἶναι τὰ οὐράνια σώματα καὶ βλάπτειν ἀφ' ἑαυτῶν καὶ ὠφελεῖν, οὗτος ἀσύγγνωστός ἐστι διὰ τὴν τοιαύτην ἀσέβειαν· οὐ γὰρ αὐτὰ παρ' ἑαυτῶν προήχθησαν ἀλλὰ παρὰ τοῦ σοφοῦ δημιουργοῦ· καὶ ὥσπερ ὁ ὑδρηφόρος τροχὸς οὐκ οἴκοθεν ἔσχε τὴν τοιαύτην κίνησιν, οὐδὲ μάτην ταῦτα ποιεῖται, ἀλλὰ παρὰ τοῦ ἐπιτηδευσαμένου τοῦτο καὶ διὰ τὸ τὸν λειμῶνα ἀρδεύειν, οὕτω δὴ καὶ ταῦτα διὰ τὸ τὰ τῇδε κινεῖν καὶ συμμετατρέπειν παρὰ τῆς θείας ἐδημιουργήθη προνοίας, καὶ ὥσπερ τὸ πῦρ καῖον καὶ φωτίζον τῆς οἰκείας οὐκ αἰσθάνεται ἐνεργείας, οὕτω καὶ ταῦτα ἀλόγως τὰς οἰκείας ἐνεργείας ἀποτελεῖ· ὁ γοῦν τοιαύτην περὶ αὐτῶν ἔχων δόξαν τῆς εὐσεβοῦς τῶν Χριστιανῶν οὐκ ἐκπίπτει πίστεως.

Περὶ τοῦ ὅτι ἁμαρτάνει τὰ μέγιστα ὁ ταύτην μὴ προσδεχόμενος.

Πηγὴ ὢν ὁ θεὸς σοφίας ἐποίησε πρῶτον κατὰ τὸν Μωσέα τὸν οὐρανὸν καὶ τὴν γῆν, τὴν μὲν κέντρου λόγον πρὸς τὸν οὐρανὸν ἔχουσαν, τὸν δὲ πανταχόθεν ἐπίσως ταύτην περιέχοντα καὶ ταῖς ἰδίαις κινήσεσι πανταχόθεν αὐτὴν διεξάγοντα· καὶ δῆλον ἔκ τε τοῦ δύο κινήσεις ἐναντίας αὐτῷ προσπλακῆναι, τὴν μὲν ἐξ ἀνατολῶν ἐπὶ δυσμάς, τὴν δὲ ἀπὸ δυσμῶν ἐπὶ ἀνατολήν, ἤτοι τὴν τῶν ἀστέρων, καὶ ἐκ τοῦ εἶναι ἐν αὐτῷ δύο μὲν φωστῆρας μεγάλους καὶ ἀστέρας πλάνητας καὶ ἑτέρους ἀπλανεῖς καὶ πάλιν τῶν πλανήτων τοὺς μὲν βραδυκινήτους, τοὺς δὲ ταχυκινήτους, καὶ ἀναποδισμοὺς ἐν αὐτοῖς ὁρᾶσθαι καὶ προποδισμούς· καὶ στηριγμοὺς καὶ φάσεις ἑῴας τε καὶ ἑσπερίας καὶ σχηματισμοὺς διαφόρους πρὸς ἀλλήλους καὶ συνόδους· δι' ὧν ἐν γενέσει καὶ φθορᾷ οὗτος ὁ κόσμος διεξάγει καὶ τὰ ζῷα γεννᾶται καὶ τὰ φυτὰ φύεται καὶ οἱ καιροὶ ἀλλοιοῦνται καὶ οἱ ὄμβροι κατάγονται καὶ αἱ βασιλεῖαι ἐγείρονται καὶ οἱ πόλεμοι ἀνάπτονται. εἰ δέ τις τὰς τούτων ἐνεργείας ἀνατρέπειν ἐπιχειρήσαι, εὐθὺς τῆς τοῦ θεοῦ σοφίας ἀρνητὴς γίνεται. ταὐτὸ γάρ ἐστι τούτῳ τὸ λέγειν ταῦτα μάτην παρὰ τοῦ θείου λόγου προῆχθαι. ὁ δὲ τὴν τοῦ θεοῦ σοφίαν ἀρνούμενος βλασφημεῖ κατὰ τοῦ ἁγίου Πνεύματος· ὁ δὲ κατὰ τούτου βλασφημῶν ἀσύγγνωστον ἔχει τὸ ἁμάρτημα, flesh and the dung of the wolf and the squirting cucumber and the scammony and the inner pith — for these, when applied according to medical reasoning, are of the greatest benefit, but in another application become harmful and destructive — so too astronomy, taken with pious reasoning for the apprehension 5 of (f.26*) the celestial motions and positions and configurations, and further of the good or evil things that are about to come to pass, lifts one to the glorification of the Creator and gives the mind wings toward divine contemplations and toward the splendor on high; but if anyone uses it as the Greeks do, believing the heavenly bodies to be gods and to harm and benefit of themselves, 10 such a person is without excuse on account of such impiety; for they were not brought forth by themselves but by the wise Creator; and just as the water-wheel did not acquire such motion from itself, nor does it perform these actions in vain, but from the one who devised it and for the purpose of irrigating the meadow, so too these bodies were created by divine providence 15 for the purpose of moving and transforming things here below; and just as fire, burning and giving light, is not aware of its own activity, so too these bodies accomplish their proper activities without reason. He, therefore, who holds such an opinion about them does not fall away from the pious faith of Christians.

On the fact that one who does not accept this errs in the greatest ways.

God, being the source of wisdom, created first, according to Moses, the heaven and the earth — the latter having the role of a center in relation to heaven, while heaven encompasses it equally from all sides and governs it from all sides through its own motions. This is evident both from the fact that two contrary motions are attached to it, one from east to west and another from west to east, that is, the motion of the stars, and from the fact that there are in it two great luminaries and wandering stars and other fixed ones, and again among the planets some that move slowly and others that move swiftly, and retrogradations are observed in them as well as direct motions, stations, morning and evening appearances, and various configurations with one another and conjunctions — through all of which this world proceeds in generation and corruption, and animals are born and plants grow and seasons change and rains descend and kingdoms rise and wars are kindled. But if anyone should attempt to overturn the workings of these things, he immediately becomes a denier of the wisdom of God. For it is the same thing for him as saying that these things were brought forth in vain by the divine Word.But he who denies the wisdom of God blasphemes against the Holy Spirit; and he who blasphemes against the latter has a sin that is without forgiveness.

as Christ says in the holy Gospel, so that whoever overturns this science sins most gravely.

(G. 26)[1] Every teaching and every intellectual learning and every practical art serves itself alone and turns back upon itself, and even if it shares something in common with certain other sciences, the utility of astronomy pervades all the sciences, and this is its most notable distinction — that it needs none of them, while all of them need it and receive it as their mistress, as will be demonstrated in what follows. For it determines the season of days and hours fit for action and unfit for action, and the climatic zones of the inhabited world as they lie, and how a nation and a country are assigned to each zodiac sign; it prescribes when one ought to hold banquets, spectacles, festivals, and gift-givings; furthermore it treats of fugitives falling into chains, of matters of everyday life, of agriculture, of changes of residence, of building construction, and of marriages; and at what seasons one ought to conduct political affairs and attack enemies and establish courts and perform public duties and undertake journeys and sojourns; and of illnesses in their onset, and likewise of surgical operations on the sick, † before meals, and of the compounding of medicines, and of dreams, and of kings' campaigns and the setting out of armies and generals, and the discernment of foreign peoples; and furthermore it is useful with respect to letters delivered from outside and20 those brought forward and sent in turn. No less also through it are spies and plotters more readily detected, as well as the abundance and scarcity of crops and the goodness and badness of the year, for one who attends to the horoscope in accordance with the method of the art.

On the fact that it is the most honored of all arts.

Since the foreknowledge of things to come happens to be the most honored of all things, the Creator of all reserved this for himself alone, and although he granted all good things to this small world, he did not share this one with it — unless one were first purified by practice and deemed worthy of illumination by the all-holy Spirit, as the divine prophets of old and the apostles were, or else by persevering in study with much sweat and toil, to contemplate it dimly. For most of the ancients, declaring that they rejoiced in every luxury of life on account of its pleasantness and sublimity, continued throughout the entire span of their lives to observe the movements of the stars and their configurations in relation to one another, up to the point of their unceasing examination thereof, and they attained <some> (f. 27*) part of foreknowledge. It is therefore evident from such things that astronomy is the most honored of all the arts, since, as has been said, the divine end claimed it for itself.

It is also possible to demonstrate this same thing by means of a certain syllogism. It goes as follows: the greatness of every science is characterized by its subject matter and its end; therefore, whichever science surpasses the rest in both subject matter and end would be the most honorable of all; now, astronomy has as its subject the celestial vault and the stars, which surpass all things, inasmuch as they have obtained a superior order and are separated from material things, drawing near to the first cause; and its end, as has been demonstrated, is the most exalted of all things; therefore it will be more honorable than all the remaining sciences — which was what needed to be shown.

On the fact that the stars do not act by their own free will, but by the power of the Creator.

Extend, O man, your mind to your creation and behold the perceptible creatures of God, and contemplate each one according to reason; when therefore you hear the names of the zodiac signs and the planets and the operations written concerning them, do not suppose that they are animate beings possessing sensation or makers of existing things, as some have imagined in their error; for they are not makers but creations of the monarchical, without beginning, and three-hypostatic God; He created them for His own glorification and set them as signs for the benefit of mankind, just as the other elements existing upon the earth — namely air, fire, water, and the various plants — exist for the benefit and functioning of living beings, without benefiting themselves, and without having sensation of themselves.For just as our sense organs act upon one another and are unable to benefit themselves — since the ear hears words and sounds and prompts the tongue to speak, yet is itself unable to speak, for it is from hearing that the tongue speaks, and the one who is deaf from birth has never spoken — likewise the eye sees colors and shapes and discerns existing things as they are, but does not see itself; likewise the nose perceives the pleasant and unpleasant smells and distinguishes them, yet has no perception of its own properties. Who has ever seen his own eye, or who has ever smelled the odor of his own mouth or nose? — Not at all. So too the aforementioned stars were created for the governance and benefit of living beings, reminding of things past, interpreting things present, and foretelling things to come, according to the command of the all-wise Creator.

On the fact that prognosis through medicine and astronomy is a skilled conjecture.

The prognosis through medicine and astrology is a skilled conjecture. Therefore the truth-loving man, knowing this, ought to foretell medical and astronomical symptoms in a human, measured, and conjectural manner, and, so to speak, with a mind divided in two. For it is not possible to supply the whole of prognosis through astrology alone, nor is the movement of the stars alone the cause of the alteration of human conditions, but also customs and laws and places and education and providence and prayer to God and prophetic knowledge of things to come — just as neither is it possible in medicine to supply the whole account of the alteration of bodies; for there are certain causes stronger than medicine that alter us, which the physician does not know, such as celestial phenomena. So too around the movement of the stars there are certain causes that produce alteration. F. C.

C. 112. 114. On Sowing, from Rhetorius.

When the Zodiac circle is divided into 360 degrees and its beginning is taken from the degree of the horoscope toward the preceding signs, a right-angled triangle arises; of which the first side, above the earth, is the hypotenuse subtending the right angle, of 150 degrees; the third side is below the earth, from the degree of the horoscope, the beginning or base, of 90 degrees; and the second side is the perpendicular toward the western parts, of 120 degrees. From these positions and from the conjunction that preceded the birth and from the conjunction of the horoscope itself, knowledge is obtained; and if this conjunction itself falls in the region above the earth, that is, within the 150 degrees of the horoscope of the hypotenuse subtending the right angle, the child born will be of nine months; even if the position of one of them falls on the first side and the other happens to fall on the second; but if both fall on the second side, or one, whichever it may be, on the second, and the other on the third, it will be a seven-month child; and if either both positions fall on the third side, or one on the first, of the

G. 113. 115. On Parents 1.

5 Matters concerning the father are derived from the Sun and Saturn and the figure of the Lot of the Father; matters concerning the mother from the Moon and Venus and the Lot of the Mother — specifically by day from the Sun and Venus, and by night from Saturn and the Moon — and seek also the lords of these and the triplicity lords and term rulers, for from these principal points the parents will be known, both their afflictions and their livelihood and the length of their life, and dangers and crafts and lineage and possessions, and in short everything concerning the parents in this way. Reject therefore also those who aspect Scorpio and the transmissions and omissions of the stars, as Valens in the 4th book, and the distribution of the Lot of Fortune and the Lot of the Daimon, as Valens. Those who have the Sun in the terms of Mars by day, and by night in the terms of Saturn, with Saturn and Mars bearing witness in square or opposition, without Jupiter or Venus, become parricides or father-beaters; but if you find the Moon in place of a star, they become matricides.Those who have the Lot of either parent in the 12th house, or the lord of the Lot, become enemies of their parents. The Sun angular in opposition to Mars makes the parents enemies toward their children. If Jupiter overcomes Saturn, the parents are at odds with their children; but if Saturn overcomes Jupiter, they are in harmony. If he is in opposition, they become contentious toward their parents; if in trine, they are friends. Seek also the maltreatments of the luminaries — for the Sun, those in the east, and for the Moon, those in the west — and also the enclosures of the luminaries. If spear-bearers are taken away and attend the luminaries, the parents will no longer have the same good fortune, especially if Mars is in the sign following the Sun and Saturn in the sign following the Moon.

30 Always, when seeking the times of the parents, cast out the years of the child from the Lot of Parents, and observe the overseeing planets

according to station or transit, and from this declare the year of the father or of the mother. Seek also the courses of the Sun and Moon in relation to the malefics or benefics according to the canons and the ascensions of Valens. Seek also the periods and the returns of the Sun and Moon in relation to the returns and periods of the malefics and benefics, together with the rising-times and the periods and returns of the Zodiacal signs in relation to Leo (?), Scorpio and Virgo (?), as Valens taught; and let it not escape you that Aries is in opposition to Virgo, and Libra to Pisces, and Gemini to Capricorn, and Cancer to Sagittarius. The benefics, beholding the preceding conjunction, indicate good things for the parents; the contrary sign indicates exposure and ignoble parentage; the same result occurs even if they hold the application of the Moon; and those who are free are brought into servitude.when the conjunction is beheld by benefics, but the benefics are overcoming by the malefics, and if the Moon herself, having separated from the benefics, is carried toward the malefics, she produces subjection or slavery instead of freedom. As I have tested, the conjunction and its ruler signify the paternal life, while the Moon and her ruler signify the maternal; for it often happens that the father is of noble birth while the mother is a slave, even though the distinction between them arises from a single conjunction. If a malefic beholds the ruler of the Sun, it harms the father and the paternal estate; if it beholds the ruler of the Moon, the harm falls upon the mother. I found in Antigonus that the conjunction or the full moon signifies the mother, while their rulers signify the father. A. O.13 A. O.

Look to the lords of the lots of the parents to see which of them has fallen in the subterranean hemisphere, and that one will die first; but if both are in a single sign, seek which of them is applying, or becomes combust, and that one will die first; and if they are in a single sign and in the same degree, determine the term-ruler of that degree, and if it is in a masculine sign, the father will die first, but if in a feminine sign, the mother. It will therefore be necessary to observe also which of the lords of the lots the malefics bear witness to, so that you may know more reliably. Seek how the Sun and Saturn are positioned, and Venus and the Moon, and which of them is more afflicted, and from the greatest affliction you will know who will die first; but if all are afflicted, there will be orphanhood. The malefics in opposition to the luminaries indicate that the parents will be short-lived. If the Sun and Saturn are in the same degree together, they destroy the father first and the elder brothers, and also bring about inheritances. The Sun in the degree of Saturn in any sign together with malefics indicates that those born are stillborn or maimed, and quickly destroys the father. If Saturn comes to be in the same degree as the Moon, it destroys the mother first; and if Mars also aspects it, it causes death either from a difficult birth or from hidden illnesses. The Moon running void destroys the father first. The Sun on the 8th degree of a sign destroys the father first. Mars by day upon the natal Sun does not allow one to know the father; by night it causes orphanhood.These things Saturn also does to the Sun; but the Moon alternately; if Jupiter and Venus, it produces nobility or long life of the father. Mars or Saturn in the subterranean fourth destroys the father first. Saturn in the house of the Sun makes the father die a violent death or be troubled by fluid ailments. Saturn in the house of the Moon ruins maternal affairs and causes bodily ailments and chills. Mars in the house of the Sun quickly destroys the father or leads him to a foreign land, and also damages the sight of the native. Mars in the house of the Moon brings bodily dangers and swift death to the mother; it also ruins maternal affairs and afflicts the native in the stomach region, and causes sudden death or violent death. A. O.

C. 114. 117. On Brothers.

It is difficult to conjecture and nearly impossible to state the number of brothers; for it is recorded that Hecuba gave birth to 19 children, and we ourselves saw in Byzantium a mother of 24 children; and some men take many wives and one woman takes many husbands. It is therefore safer to speak of polygamy, or having many brothers, or having many children, and such things; nonetheless the ancients did not hesitate to state, as far as possible, even the number of brothers; and so we too undertake to speak of it as far as possible. If θεωρή, call brothers friends; Jupiter, Venus, Mercury well placed, oriental, in a feminine Sign give female siblings, but in masculine signs, male and long-lived; but if they fall or are afflicted, they will give siblings, but short-lived or hostile or damaged; especially if they are also under the rays; the lord of the 3rd place ascending or angular indicates the noble birth of those born; the lord of the 3rd place, if it be direct and well placed, beheld by benefics, provides siblings to the native; but if a malefic sees it, it either destroys the siblings or separates them in a foreign land. The Moon applying to Saturn or Mars destroys an elder sister. Venus beheld by Saturn or Mars destroys younger sisters.

C. 115. 118. On Occupation, Pursuit, and Crafts. The account concerning occupation and pursuit, being a necessary one, I endeavored to set down in order, having made a selection from various ancient sources for the soundness of the science; but I commend Anubion who said: in occupation, first seek the affliction, for by reason of it

neither a distinguished craft nor fortune does he bestow and that the practitioner must first examine the account concerning affliction, since how is it possible for the gouty man to become a runner, or the one maimed in the hand to become a cobbler, or the blind man a tailor? Having therefore considered the account concerning affliction, let us proceed to the quality of occupation. The givers of occupations, then, are these: Mercury, Venus, Mars; and the practical places are: the Ascendant, the Midheaven, the subterranean point, and the succedents of these, but also the 6th place and the Lot of Fortune and the application of the Moon and the one making a morning or evening rising seven days before or seven days after. If, then, Mercury and Venus and Mars happen to be turned away from the Midheaven and the Ascendant, they render such persons unsuccessful in their occupations, especially if also the lord of the Midheaven happens to be in a foreign sign, for he too gives occupation when placed in the Midheaven. And Anubion also says that one must seek from which conjunction or full moon the Moon is being carried toward someone and declare the occupation according to that one; for example, if toward Venus, to have occupations from women; if toward Jupiter, prosperous and dignified; if toward Mars, military; if toward Mercury, literary; if toward Saturn, a man of affairs, super-manner, steward; and if the planet providing the activity happens to be in its own house, it provides according to its own nature, but if in a foreign sign, it also takes along the lord of the house — for example, if in Sagittarius or Pisces, they make the activities glorious, well-reputed, and joyful. 5 But if in Taurus or Aquarius, sordid, laborious, and disgraceful; if in Aries or Scorpio, through weapons, fire, iron, harshness, or public affairs; if in Libra or Taurus, whatever involves embroidery, fragrance, and the like; and if Jupiter also looks upon these, in sacred or perfect matters; if in the house of Mercury, instructors in calculation, letters, wrestling, commerce, weights, and scales; if in Leo, self-taught and self-educated; but if by night, it grants the manifest crafts practiced in the marketplaces, or those of fire or iron — and indeed from the topical distinction and the signs in which the planets providing activity are located, the specific individual characteristics are combined toward the variety of activity, as Ptolemy teaches.But there are also other such things: for example, Mars, Saturn, and the Sun being in active places — especially in the Midheaven and Ascendant — make sailors; Mercury in the 3rd, Mars in the 9th, hunters; Mars and Mercury in the houses or terms of Venus, physicians. Mars and Mercury in the Ascendant or Midheaven, athletes, bold and daring, lovers of war; Saturn provides activity — Saturn contrary to sect in a foreign sign in the Midheaven gives crafts involving liquids, such as water-drawers, gardeners, fishermen, water-carriers; Saturn, Mars, Moon in the Ascendant or Midheaven, philosophers, orators, astrologers; Cancer, Scorpio, Pisces rising  Jupiter, Saturn below the earth, herbalists; Saturn on the Ascendant, Mars occidental, hunters, beast-fighters, or those eaten by dogs; Saturn and Moon occidental in watery places, living as sailors. But above all one must seek the results of the conjunctions and separations of the Moon, and of the signs, and of the paranatellonta, the decanal results, and also to seek the Lot of Activity and its lord, for these too contribute to foreknowledge. λίαν φέρῃ πρός σε, οὕτω γνώσῃ τὸ κεκρυμμένον· πῆξον τὰ κέντρα καὶ τὰς ἐποχὰς τῶν ἀστέρων ὡς ἐπὶ γενέσεως, καὶ ἐὰν μὲν Κρόνος ὡρ(οσκο)π(ῇ) ἢ μ(εσου)ρ(ανῇ), ἐν ᾗ ὥρᾳ ἔλαβες τὴν ἐπιστολήν, ἐστὶν ἡ ἀγγελία λίαν χαλεπή· εἰ δὲ συνήντησε Σελήνῃ ἢ τετραγωνίσῃ, διπλοῦς ὁ ἀγών ἐστι καὶ αὐστηρότερος. ἐὰν δὲ Κρόνος στηρίζῃ ὡροσκοπῶν ἢ μεσουρανῶν, δεινὴν ἀγγελίαν ἀναγκαίων τινῶν περιέχει. εἰ δὲ καὶ Ἑρμῆς συμπαρῇ, ἐπιβεβαιώσει πάντα ἐπὶ τὸ χεῖρον· ἡ δὲ ἐπιστολὴ ὑπὸ ἀνθρώπου πονηροῦ γέγραπται· ὁ δὲ ἀποδοὺς καὶ ὁ γράψας ἐχθροί σού εἰσι καὶ ἀντίδικοι· μάλιστα δὲ οὗ τὸ χειρόγραφόν ἐστι πάντων σοι πολεμιώτατος. ἐὰν δὲ μετὰ Κρόνου συνῇ Ζεύς, ἐστὶ τὰ γεγραμμένα μικτά, ὅπου μὲν ἀγαθά, ὅπου δὲ φαῦλα· κακὸν μέντοι γε οὐ κατισχύσει· ἔστι δὲ τὸ ἐπιστόλιον παρ' ἀνδρὸς ὑπερέχοντος, μισοπονήρου, δικαίου. εἰ δὲ μετὰ Κρόνου συμπαρῇ Ἀφροδίτη, ἐστὶ μὲν κοινὰ τὰ γεγραμμένα ἐκ φαύλων καὶ ἀγαθῶν, μετὰ δὲ γυναικὸς γνώμης γέγραπται ἡ ἐπιστολή· ὁ δὲ τρόπος τοῦ γεγραφότος μικτὸς ἐκ πονηρίας καὶ χρηστότητος, μᾶλλον ἐπὶ τὸ ἀγαθὸν ῥέπων.

Ἐὰν Ἄρης ὡρ(οσκο)πῇ ἢ μ(εσου)ρ(ανῇ) ἢ ἐπὶ καταφορᾶς τοῦ Ἡλίου γένηται, ἐπιβουλὴν μεγάλην περιέχει ἡ ἐπιστολή· ὁ δὲ κομίζων τὴν ἐπιστολὴν συνίστωρ ἐστὶ τῆς ἐπιβουλῆς καὶ ἐννοῶν τὰ χαλεπά. ἐὰν δὲ στηρίζων τύχῃ ὁ Ἄρης ὡρ(οσκό)π(ῳ) ἢ μ(εσου)ρ(ανήματι), μέγιστον ἀγῶνα περιέχει καὶ ἀπώλειάν τινα μειζόνων· γέγραπται δὲ ὑπὸ πονηροῦ ἀνδρὸς ὀξυθύμου, θερμοῦ, ἀσεβοῦς. ἐὰν δὲ Ζεὺς συμπαρῇ, κοινά ἐστι τὰ γεγραμμένα· ἐὰν δὲ Ἀφροδίτη, κοινὰ μὲν τὰ ἐνόντα εἰσίν, ὑπὸ δὲ γυναικὸς ἢ σπάδωνος γέγραπται· ἐὰν δὲ Σελήνη συνῇ τῷ Ἑρμῇ, τὰ αὐτὰ νοείσθω ὅπερ καὶ ἐπὶ Κρόνου· ἐὰν Ἄρης αὐτῷ σύνεστι καὶ εἰ μὲν μὴ στηρίζει ὁ ἀστήρ, περιέχει ἡ ἐπιστολὴ ῥᾳδιουργίαν καὶ νοσφισμὸν καὶ δόλον καὶ περιεργίαν καὶ ψεῦδος· ὁ δὲ γράψας ἐστὶ κοινωνὸς ἢ χειριστὴς πραγμάτων ἢ ἐμπορικὴν ἔχων ἐργασίαν· ἐὰν δὲ στηρίζῃ, χείρονά ἐστι τὰ νοούμενα καὶ δολιώτερα καὶ ἀγωνιστικώτερα. εἰ δὲ Σελήνη συμπαρῇ, χείρονα ἀποτελέσει, ὥσπερ καὶ ἐπὶ Κρόνου εἴρηται, καὶ ὁ ἀποκομιστὴς συνίστωρ ἐστὶ τοῦ κακοῦ ἢ ἐπεβούλευσεν ἐν τῇ ὁδῷ τῇ σφραγῖδι καὶ τῇ ἐπιστολῇ.

to you, in this way you shall know what is hidden: fix the angles and the positions of the stars as for a nativity, and if Saturn holds the horoscope or culminates at the hour in which you received the letter, the message is exceedingly grave; and if the Moon is in conjunction or in square with it, the conflict is twofold and more severe. But if Saturn is stationary while occupying the horoscope or the midheaven, the message contains terrible news concerning certain necessities. And if Mercury is present together with it, it will confirm everything for the worse; and the letter has been written by a wicked man; and both the one who delivered it and the one who wrote it are your enemies and adversaries; and above all, the one whose handwriting it is, is your greatest enemy. But if Jupiter is together with Saturn, the contents of the letter are mixed, partly good and partly bad; yet evil shall not prevail; and the letter is from a man of superior standing, who hates wickedness and is just. And if Venus is present together with Saturn, the contents of the letter are a mixture of bad and good, and the letter has been written with a woman's counsel; and the character of the writer is mixed of wickedness and goodness, leaning more toward the good.

If Mars is in the horoscope or at midheaven or is at the setting of the Sun, the letter contains a great conspiracy; and the one who carries the letter is privy to the conspiracy and is aware of the harmful intentions. 20 But if Mars happens to be stationary at the horoscope or midheaven, it contains the greatest conflict and a certain destruction of greater things; and it has been written by a wicked man who is quick-tempered, hot-headed, and impious. If Jupiter is present together with it, the contents of the letter are matters of common concern; if Venus is present, the contents are likewise matters of common concern, but it has been written by a woman or a eunuch; if the Moon 25 is in conjunction with Mercury, the same interpretation should be understood as in the case of Saturn; if Mars is in conjunction with it and if the star is not stationary, the letter contains fraud and embezzlement and deceit and meddling and falsehood; and the one who wrote it is a partner or an administrator of affairs or one engaged in commercial business; but if it is stationary, the intended meanings are worse and more deceitful and more contentious. 30 If the Moon is present together with it, it will produce worse outcomes, just as was stated in the case of Saturn, and the carrier is privy to the evil or plotted against the seal and the letter along the way.

If Mercury is in the horoscope or at midheaven, the letter contains great good things concerning livelihood and salvation, both of present and past matters, and everything is true; and the one who wrote the letter, if Jupiter is present together with it, 35 is a man distinguished in reputation and just; if Venus is present, he is a young man newly entered into affairs, cheerful and playful and good, and the letter-bearer is just and well-disposed.

But if Jupiter is in the ascendant or at midheaven, it contains great good things and true and joyful tidings concerning both present and past matters and things to come; and it has been sent by a great and truthful ruler; and the one who wrote it is distinguished and a friend of yours. But if it is together with the Moon in the ascendant, the good things indicated are further increased; and if Jupiter is stationary, the good is doubled. And if Mercury is also present, it increases the good things indicated; but it also contains reference to some gain and profit, and it has been written with the counsel of two men, of whom the one is just and good, while the other is just but deceitful, and the one who delivers the letter is well-disposed toward you in his thinking. But if Saturn or Mars is in conjunction with it, consider the contents as mixed, some things good and some bad. 101

But if Venus is in the ascendant or at midheaven, the letter contains cheerful and joyful tidings; and it has been written — if Venus is in the ascendant in a masculine sign — by a good woman who is well disposed toward you; and if Venus is stationary, the glad tidings will be doubled; and if the Moon or Mercury is present, the good will be confirmed, and more so through Mercury; but on account of Mercury it contains varied and eloquent words; and it has been written by a young man who is cheerful, but crafty and secretive and sociable and thieving and perjurious and lying, and who pilfers your possessions cleanly and unsuspectedly. But if Mercury is not present, it has been written by a woman of common station; and the letter-bearer is by nature just and well-disposed toward you. But if Saturn or Mars is present together with Venus, the contents are mixed, both fair and harsh; and the good things are of a commanding, frank nature; and it has been written by a superior man with some urgency, frankly and carelessly; .... the .... sets, the letter contains some accusation; and the handwriting is that of someone exceedingly arrogant, and so too is the one who brings it.

But if the Moon herself ascends alone, with none of the planets rising from beneath the earth or culminating, the letter contains a certain expectation and common promises, and concerning things that have been done and completed; and the letter is a communication from an overseer or some private individual or a partner and agent or a relative; but if she is in conjunction, the letter contains an invitation. And the one who delivers it is meddlesome and officious.

But if neither the Moon nor any of the five stars is in the ascendant or culminating, the meaning is determined by what each zodiac sign signifies from the seven stars. Aries in the ascendant or culminating makes what is written commanding; Taurus in the ascendant or culminating, turbulent and angry; Gemini, mild and austere and manifold, which will also be fulfilled; Cancer indicates matters concerning the present; Leo, from those in authority and with austerity

When you have established the dominant ruler, examine the destructive rays of the malefics, the square and opposition of a star up to the ninetieth degree, and from the ascensional times the quantity of life becomes clear; a benefic is able to cast rays into the degrees following the destructive ninetieth degree up to 5 or even more, if it is within the same term, to counteract the affliction.

F. 137. Dorotheus on Transits.

One must also pay attention to the transits of the stars. For Saturn coming upon Jupiter harms whatever Jupiter provides and extinguishes every action and impulse; and Jupiter coming to Saturn brings losses and makes what is undertaken harmful. Saturn upon the place of Mars makes men cowardly and unwilling; Saturn into the Sun brings dangers and judgments through authority, and more so when stationary; Saturn upon Venus harms the good things of Venus. Saturn upon Mercury harms what is given by Mercury. Saturn into the Moon is likewise evil, for it brings blame and reproaches, and worse if Saturn is also stationary. Saturn in opposition to the Moon is evil, and more so when under the beams; for it brings diseases, and Mars too when thus regarding the Moon.

Jupiter coming to Saturn provides relief from pre-existing sorrow; such persons will take charge of another's work and will spend willingly; Jupiter upon Mars provides both action and favor and increases all things and makes enemies submissive. Jupiter in the square of Mars or Saturn likewise indicates good things, and so too does Venus, for always the the benefics coming to the square of the malefics provide pleasures, health, and honors.

Mars coming upon the Sun or Jupiter, and especially so by day, is malefic, and more so if it is setting; and if it is also stationary, it is even more dangerous; for it signifies bodily dangers and lawsuits on account of ancient matters. Mars does the same also when it comes to the opposition of the Sun and Jupiter; but likewise the Sun passing through or Jupiter transiting Mars or in opposition produces the same effects. In these transits, if the malefic was in trine by fixity to the sign in which the harm by transit occurred, the evil is lighter, since the opposition aspects are the most powerful of all, while the squares are stronger than the conjunctions. Of the squares, pay more attention to the right ones, which are also said to overcome; for malefics transiting in these and overcoming the stars cause greater harm, while benefics in the squares bestow wealth, joy, and honors; but in the trine places the benefics are even more beneficent, while the malefics act with less force.

Saturn and Mars, in their transits in aspect to the Sun, Moon, and Jupiter, both bodily and by square or opposition, and likewise in their returns and counter-returns — that is, when they come to the position fixed at their own nativity or to its opposition — become more harmful, provided they were badly placed from the beginning. But Mars becomes milder after the completion of 45 years, and Saturn becomes gentler after the completion of 30 years. Likewise, the malefics are troublesome when transiting the four angles or the luminaries; but if they were originally in good and appropriate places, they make the afflictions by transit less severe, just as the benefics, when originally placed in bad positions, become weak in transit.

It should be known that the positions of the stars by nativity remain fixed, while those by transit are in all cases configured in relation to the original positions — such as trines, squares, and oppositions. 30

The chapter on transits is essential for stating when the indicated events occur. Every planet in transit that opposes itself is malefic, and when it comes to its natal position it is harmful — especially if Mars in a diurnal nativity aspects the Sun in transit, and in nocturnal nativities Saturn aspects the Moon. Worse still are stations during such transits; Mars, however, forming a trine not by transit but by nativity with the Sun or Jupiter, is not particularly malefic in subsequent transits to them.

Mars coming to Saturn makes men industrious, ready, and active, and stirs them up against their enemies. Mars coming to Jupiter, Venus, and Mercury turns to the worse what these planets provide. Mars coming to the Sun, if he is found under the rays in transit, subdues through fever or brings damage by fire; and if one has a father, he also destroys him, or an old man who holds the position of a father; and he is harmful toward great men and troublesome in every undertaking, especially in public affairs. Mars moving to the Moon brings bodily illness or financial harm and provides benefits only with toil; they will merely behold their enemies, that is, they will have power over their enemies. Mars moving to Venus causes irregularities in matters of love. Mars moving to Mercury produces deceits, suspicions, disgraceful acts, and enmities toward friends, as well as the flight of slaves or thefts and a diminution of livelihood or activities; for he especially diminishes one's livelihood and destroys one's affairs. Venus moving to Saturn is favorable for action and everything, just as Mars moving to Saturn is good.Venus moving to Jupiter disturbs and causes grief on account of women, and will disappoint one's hopes, and nothing that one may conceive will come to pass. Venus moving to the Sun brings frequent associations with women and censure on account of women; it disturbs the soul and causes instability in households. Venus moving to Mercury increases what Mercury produces, that is, what he provides. Venus moving to the Moon is cheerful and effective, yet through a feminine figure it brings grief or censure. Mercury moving to Jupiter is best for every matter, and especially for those who wish to approach men of power. Mercury moving to Mars makes men bold, inventive, and roused to action. Mercury moving to Venus stirs up erotic desires, and benefits one also in practical affairs and other works. Mercury moving to the Moon provides health and vigor and gives strength to the limbs.

The luminaries in the places of benefics are beneficial, but in those of malefics, harmful; the malefic coming to the angles is very harmful; for the Ascendant governs the whole of life, the Midheaven governs actions, children, and glory, the Descendant governs marriage and old age, and the IC governs the hidden parts of the body, foundations, buildings, and markets. The Moon coming to her own place produces elevation of mind; but if she happens to be in a tropical sign, she transfers from one activity to another; but if she happens to be with Venus and Jupiter by position, she provides great joy. The Moon coming to the Sun in Leo is favorable for introductions. The Moon coming to Mars suddenly signifies sudden dangers, unless a benefic should behold her; likewise also when the Moon comes to the Sun with Mars looking on. The Sun to Mars, or Mars to the Sun, and the Sun or Mars to the Moon when the Sun is in conjunction, indicates bloodshed or harm from fire. The Moon to Venus when malefics are not looking on, the time is favorable; but if Mars is in conjunction with the Moon or with Venus, it signifies sexual unions of women. The Moon to Saturn is cold, but when Saturn is in his own triplicity, benefit comes from rulers. The Moon to Mercury when benefic indicates good things, but when malefic, difficulties. The Moon to the Ascendant elevates the soul; to the Midheaven it brings promotions and honors; what sort of honors these will be you shall know from the star testifying to the Moon. The Moon to the Descendant is favorable against the plots of enemies; likewise also to the IC it is favorable against treacheries and plots of enemies and secret affairs and hidden matters and association with such persons. But one must not consider the transits of all the stars, but only those of the time-lords, that is, those of the hyparcter and the bound-ruler; for Ptolemy says: if the same planets lord both the times and the transits, the outcome is unmixed.But we, following continuous experience, find that these transits greatly contribute to the outcomes of the times, not only when the stars come to the places dominant by position, but also to the place of the times found from the progression; for we find this guaranteed also by the great Ptolemy in the second, third, and fourth books of the Tetrabiblos.

Such are the words of Dorotheus; and Orpheus also says these things concerning transits: Saturn transiting Jupiter causes failures of livelihood and is a destroyer of possessions, scatters the marriage of a woman, and causes harm in every undertaking. Saturn transiting Mars is the cause of imprisonments, bonds, and diseases; it brings grief on account of children, portends the ruin of possessions, and makes some into exiles or persons in servitude and poverty. Saturn transiting the Sun accomplishes actions with toil; one must avoid sea voyages and journeys on account of fear of robbers. Saturn transiting Venus causes enmity toward relatives and friends, brings deceptions, disturbances, and losses; and he who has a wife will be put to shame on account of her wantonness. Saturn transiting Mercury portends quarrels and lawsuits, losses, disturbances, and unjust deaths of relatives; one must avoid the marketplaces and sharing one's affairs with others, for it produces schemes and deceptions. Saturn transiting the Moon causes uprisings of places, or chronic illnesses, or the ruin and loss of possessions. Saturn transiting itself causes migrations, in foreign places wanderings, and signifies turmoil, imprisonment, and bonds, the deaths of parents, the ruin of household and wealth. Saturn in the ascendant transplants one to another land, and also brings about deceits, losses, and dangers. Saturn in the midheaven leads one away to a foreign land and bestows glory, but causes distress on account of debt. Saturn in the descendant and the subterranean either drives one away from one's own home and possessions, or leads one off to a foreign land, or makes one a prisoner of war, or puts slaves to death.

Jupiter in relation to Saturn makes the conduct of life irregular, at times granting the acquisition of fields, foundations, and houses, or the management of another's livelihood, at times causing men to fail in their former works and pursuits, and bringing upon others expenditures, losses, and prolonged illnesses. Jupiter in relation to itself redeems from whatever afflictions it may find and provides gains, yet also brings empty rumors and gossip, unless it chances to be in its own house according to its fixity. Jupiter in relation to the Sun brings idleness to one's affairs and ruins households, or brings about the loss of estates and the fruitless and contrary end of one's labors. Jupiter in relation to Mars is beneficial; for if it finds one in misfortune, constraint, and affliction, it delivers one from all of these, and if it finds one living in joy, it bestows even greater gladness, and makes one the friend of persons of higher station, and provides possessions, and distresses enemies, and gives gains and glory. Jupiter in relation to Venus signifies unexpected wealth, shows one superior to one's enemies, and for the unmarried provides marriage, and for the married provides children, and brings one's affairs to completion.Jupiter in relation to Mercury makes one the friend of great men, whose affairs they are trusted to manage, and they increase their own household; and it provides gifts from friends; and these men rejoice while they distress their enemies, and if they have a lawsuit, they prevail; yet the influence of Mercury must be made favorable. Jupiter in relation to the Moon brings to the married the begetting of children, and to those engaged in litigation good fortune and gain; yet having caused a little harm beforehand, it afterwards provides victory and success; and at times it also adorns certain persons with golden chains. Jupiter in relation to the ascendant and the descendant is mixed with respect to both good and ill, at times bringing lawsuits, conflicts, losses, and enmities, and at times delivering one from these and giving gains and acquisitions, at other times signifying friendship and at other times widowhood, and shameful rumor concerning marriages and turmoil on account of these things, and often also brings about the murder of a kinsman and provides inheritance therefrom, and brings the wanderer back to his homeland; but in relation to the midheaven and the subterranean, deaths of parents and illnesses and toils and afflictions; for some it provides marriage; he causes others to emigrate from their homeland, and the outcome of their affairs will be toilsome.

Mars in Saturn: whatever Saturn is wont to harm, this one preserves; for it puts an end to all diseases and sorrows and grants wealth, victory, and joy. Mars in Jupiter: destructive and harsh, expenditures of money will be made in vain; it harms in lawsuits and stirs up enemies. For pregnant women, the embryos are destroyed, or those born die very quickly; it portends harm and outrages and brings about changes of place; it renders one's affairs useless and causes grief on account of children or a wife, and brings enmity from rulers and anger from the populace. Mars in itself: it causes removal from a place, or brings diseases, or draws blood with iron, or scorches with fire; yet for one's livelihood it grants activity and glory. Mars in the Sun: it diminishes possessions and is harmful in one's affairs, causes sorrows and harms the mind, and causes grief to some on account of secret deeds; and if it is also stationary, it stirs up more grievous disturbances and quarrels over matters and brings ancestral enmity on account of old affairs, and brings betrayals and enmity from friends. Mars in Venus: expect a quarrel from a woman and anger; for it causes prolonged separation and suspicions of adultery; and sometimes they steal all the men's possessions.Mars in Mercury: it brings about losses and mostly false and deceitful lawsuits, and shames and deceits and perjuries on account of secret deeds, betrayals, exile, and imprisonments. Mars in the Moon: if the sign is feminine, fear only illness, and especially of the eyes; if it is masculine, it disturbs the conduct of one's life, and even more so if it is also stationary; for it deprives one of children and causes the death of siblings, brings dangers and disturbances, and leads one to a foreign land, or causes a change of home and gives one task after another — unless the sign of Saturn happens to be present and prevents these things. In all the angles it is difficult, bringing instability and turmoil in the household and sorrows in life, especially on account of marriage when in the setting sign; for it also causes premature births; and in the midheaven, they disgrace the marriage bed of spouses, or it also brings diseases in this angle.

The Sun in Saturn brings memories of ancient things and wealth and joy to life; the Sun in Jupiter bestows great glory and fair renown and gladness, and makes the obscure manifest. The Sun in Mars lays one low with sickness or drives one from one's homeland, destroys wealth and causes involuntary 35 losses, makes one hostile to friends and stirs up troubles from one's own household, unless Jupiter also happens to be there by epembasis. The Sun in itself or the Moon causes sicknesses and poverty and sets one moving from one's own places; but often it also brings wealth out of afflictions. The Sun in Venus is the cause of instability, disturbs the household on account of women, but provides gains in gifts. The Sun in Mercury leads the mind astray and 5 grieves the soul through deception and causes vain expenditures; the Sun in the angles causes removal from one's homes to other places and produces sicknesses and afflicts the body, but at midheaven it bestows achievement and glory.

Venus in Saturn signifies acquisition and glory among the people and 10 helps from hidden sources, but is harmful in marriage; for it overturns or otherwise exchanged the marriage bed and joined with a lesser light.

Venus in Jupiter signifies digestions, dangers, diseases, enmities, legal disputes on account of family members, and quarrels in the household and among relatives; and if 15 this man's wife is pregnant, she miscarries. Venus in Mars signifies seditions and expenditures caused by women, migration from one's place, and disturbances in life. Venus in the Sun creates instability, leads the mind astray, causes negligence and reproaches and seditions among family members. Venus in herself is common and laborious, in some respects 20 good, in other respects bad. Venus in Mercury signifies inheritances and increases possessions and brings matters to completion; and in lawsuits grants victories. Venus in the Moon signifies joy and brings delight in affairs, gives effortless gain and unites in marriage, and being in a feminine Sign brings about the begetting of children. Venus in the Ascendant 25 and Midheaven makes things cheerful and bright and successful, and increases acquisition and profits; and if she is also stationary, even more so. Venus in the Descendant signifies seditions caused by a woman. Venus in the Subterranean angle signifies hidden ailments and sorrows from spouses; and if she is also stationary, it causes afflictions of the genitals and anus and brings about the loss of decorous things and brings tears upon 30 the household.

Mercury in Saturn increases activities and possessions, and harms enemies; Mercury in Jupiter is entirely good, giving profits from trade, making illustrious friends, providing glory in households and power. Mercury in Mars indicates those active in affairs, releases them from fears, and puts an end to their labors. Mercury in the Sun is unstable in craft and action until it passes through the degrees of the Sun; after this it is effective. Mercury in Venus bestows wealth and others' riches and an inheritance from the dead, and from wives and kinsmen goodwill within the home, and it makes friends among children and slaves. Mercury in the Moon stirs up strife among those of the household and disturbs the people, and arouses lies, quarrels, and slanders in the marketplaces, unless a benefic should aspect it. For often, thus looking on favorably, it has made his craft profitable. Mercury in the Ascendant and the Midheaven brings friendship with great men and trust through words and honors among the people; but in the Setting it brings sorrows and enmities, anxieties, judgments, and pitiful debts; in the Subterranean it brings worse dangers and harms from hidden and long-standing matters.

The Moon in relation to Saturn and Mars brings idleness, sluggishness, and losses and dangers from a height or from blood; the one from Saturn, the other from Mars; but in relation to the other stars she is favorable. The Moon in relation to the Sun or in relation to herself brings sluggishness of spirit and idleness together, but at the angles it sometimes causes changes of residence.

One must not consider only these transits, but also those according to trine, square, opposition, and sextile; for such as it signifies at the nativity by position, such also in the transits; for example:

and Saturn in trine with Jupiter is very favorable indeed, Saturn in trine with Mars is very excellent.

[W. K. and A. O.]

Further on Transits, <of Anubion> 1.

Saturn transiting into Jupiter causes sudden illnesses or hardships, or poverty, or disturbances and murders in relation to family members. Jupiter into Saturn is favorable; Saturn into Mars causes enmities and malevolence and inactivity and fruitless toils. Mars entering Saturn grants victories, actions, and a most pleasant life. Saturn entering Venus, often has it destroyed the unmarried through impiety, brings either jealousy toward wives, or harm to the household, or deceit, grief, disease, 5 death, or poisonings, or pains of the stomach or joints, or it harms earlier-born children; but if none of these things occur, it has otherwise thrown the person into toil through anger. Venus entering Saturn makes women at peace with their bedfellows and brings about freedom from deceit, toil, and grief, and reproach, and chastity for those who are married, while it joins together those who are unyoked; Saturn 10 entering Mercury signifies either disease or death, but from vigorous good men it bestows the greatest benefits, whenever it enters Saturn — that is, Mercury entering Saturn. Saturn entering the horoscope and opposing it sometimes kills the younger ones; and it does this when Venus is also the time-lord of the hour; for the indications of outcomes are then 15 certain, whenever those making ingresses are also the time-lords. Jupiter entering Mars is favorable; but Mars entering Jupiter is unfavorable; yet Mars entering Jupiter does not always produce bad outcomes, but only when it is in opposition to 17 the Sun. Jupiter entering Venus rejoices greatly; for it grants the reward of toils and profit. Venus entering Jupiter does not rejoice greatly; for it produces 19 ingratitude and vain hopes.Jupiter entering Mercury and Mercury entering Jupiter are very glorious and profitable, especially for those who pursue Mercurial occupations; for even if they are in opposition to one another, they benefit nonetheless. Mars entering Venus 23 brings feminine jealousies and disturbances, and harms pregnant women by bringing on premature births. Likewise Venus entering Mars, except the 25 harm is lesser,

For the Cyprians rejoice when mighty Ares is conquered by rain.

Mars in aspect to Mercury brings either harm or disease and is evil in all other matters, nor does it bring victory to a man engaged in litigation.

Mercury in aspect to Mars brings victory to those engaged in litigation and there will be neither disease

30 nor harm, but it is evil in matters of trade. Venus in aspect to Mercury is favorable for all activities; Mercury in aspect to Venus is better for livelihood and craft and marriage and friendship, and in other works they are of benefit; but he himself excelled in establishing profitable commerce for men, 35 and in matters of litigation he is most timely; and to a man he himself gave lovely victory in his legal contest.

G. 140. 143. On the Mutual Configurations of the Stars, from the Works of Anubion.

Saturn forming a trine with Jupiter produces great wealth and abundance of gold and silver, and men who preside over temples and collect taxes, stewards, those who inherit the property of others, trustworthy persons, honored by great men. 5 This is a favorable configuration also with respect to fathers. But if Mercury should observe them forming a trine with each other, it signifies mystics and those versed in knowledge who serve kings or cities, or ministers and sacrificers; such persons also raise the children of others, whenever they happen to be placed in favorable positions; yet they do not enjoy their own children, for 10 those born under this configuration either always die, or having been raised among strangers later return to their parents. But if when Saturn and Jupiter are in trine aspect and are witnessed by Mercury, Mars should look upon them, all the aforementioned qualities will be diminished, for they will have envies and reproaches in their activities and slanders and many adversities. 15

Saturn forming a trine with Mars, if neither Jupiter nor Mercury looks on, they become prosperous and active and powerful in their activities and likewise in the cities; yet the brothers born before them die first.

Saturn trine Sun in a diurnal nativity produces advancement and renown and acquaintances, distinguished men, not only those born but also their fathers; because the Sun and Saturn occupy the paternal role; but by day, if they are in masculine signs and in the hemisphere above the earth, the condition is much better; in a nocturnal nativity, those born it makes self-sufficient; but they do not preserve the goods of their parents. 25

Saturn trine Venus produces a stable life and dignity; such persons are envied by their inferiors, yet they marry late.

Saturn trine Mercury produces men who are intelligent, experienced, and in their judg-gains secure; and their occupations derive from learning and calculation or experience, whence their livelihood is self-sufficient.

Saturn in trine with the Moon creates great associations, making men known to kings and rulers and bringing them distinction, and especially when the Moon is waxing; for when she is waning, the aforementioned effects will be greatly diminished.

Jupiter in trine with Mars makes men of authority, active, honored by commanders.

Jupiter in trine with the Sun makes men wealthy, distinguished, of authority, and is a giver of children and a cause of good marriage, and provides a notable livelihood. Jupiter in trine with Venus makes a man gracious and beloved, advancing through friends or women.

Jupiter in trine with Mercury makes men prudent, inventive, effective, held in good repute by many; their occupation derives from letters or public offices or royal services; and it signifies some as distinguished astronomers.

Jupiter in aspect with the Moon makes distinguished and prominent commanders or judges, some as public speakers and others as military men, and especially when the Moon is waxing; but if the Moon is waning, it does not make them independent masters but rather men serving such persons.

Mars trine Sun makes men of authority; and if the nativity is diurnal and the Sun occupies the right place while Mars holds the left, the configuration is even better, for these men become rulers and potentates.

Mars trine Jupiter, when Jupiter is angular and the Moon is well-placed, produces distinguished soldiers, lords of life and death, and especially when they are in masculine signs; for masculine signs are associated with authority and command, while feminine signs are associated with subordination.

Mars trine Venus produces merchants, men well-suited for marriage, lovers of adornment, and high-minded; yet such men pursue the beds of many women, that is, they become adulterers.

Mars trine Mercury produces men active and intelligent in both words and deeds, successful and sharp, gathering their livelihood from calculations or letters.

Mars trine Moon in a diurnal nativity, when the Moon is waning, produces active and successful men who prevail in all their deliberations; and if Jupiter also aspects them, they will be of authority, distinguished, and capable of great things; but in a nocturnal nativity

Mars in trine with the Moon when she is in the upper hemisphere harms both body and livelihood, especially when the Moon is waxing in light.

The Sun in trine with the Moon is a favorable configuration, especially when it is aspected by Jupiter and Venus.

Venus in trine with the Moon makes people gentle and cheerful, of fair appearance, but indicates that their marriages will be unstable.

Mercury in trine with the Moon indicates that those born will be quick to learn and intelligent.

On squares.

Saturn squaring Jupiter, when Saturn is in superior position, diminishes one's substance; they deliberate against their own interests and are hindered in their affairs or are thrown into disorder; this configuration also harms the father and all paternal inheritance is destroyed. But if Jupiter is in superior position over Saturn, the affliction is lesser; for it will bring glory to the father and to the child a means of livelihood in proportion to the degree of the configuration and its position.

Saturn squaring Mars, when Saturn is in superior position, they behave disorderly, and in body they will be subject to shivering and sickness, sometimes also overcome by chills and fever; the paternal possessions are destroyed. Such persons also witness the deaths of their brothers. But if Mars is in superior position over Saturn, the fathers in every case die before the mother, while they themselves will be partially active and effective in their livelihood; yet, as has been said, the configuration is ruinous for paternal possessions; such persons are also envied by their own kin.

Saturn squaring the Sun, with Saturn in superior position, 25 there will be downfall for the fathers, or convulsion; and the fathers die before the mothers, and the children also suffer, falling into many harms and bodily afflictions, most frequently ague-fevers; and they are also sluggish in their affairs. But when the Sun is in superior position to Saturn, the paternal inheritance is scattered, and it makes enemies of one's own people, diminishes one's affairs, and rolls them about in successive illnesses, obscure in life and unknown in their own cities. 30

Saturn squaring Venus, with Saturn in superior position, downfalls occur and many evils and griefs come from female persons; these people are mostly unfortunate in their undertakings, and have no favor with women. 35 But if Venus is in superior position to Saturn, renowned it grants marriages and wives who are commanding, benevolent, and affectionate, and they will be greatly loved by men.

Saturn squaring Mercury, with Saturn in superior position, there will be coldness in affairs and many oppositions and conflicts of opinion; such persons will be dominated by others in their work, and some become envious, others stammerers or deaf. But if Mercury is in superior position to Saturn, it makes the aforementioned effects lesser.

Saturn squaring the Moon, with Saturn in superior position, the mother will die badly and the child will be in many illnesses and dangers and constant fluxes; in feminine signs it is even worse; for if marriage is fated for such a one, he will take a barren wife and he will have neither friends nor children. The livelihood of such persons is also diminished. But if the Moon is in superior position to Saturn, in addition to making them unproductive, it shows them as enemies to their mothers, and destroys maternal inheritances and stirs up fluxes.

Jupiter squaring Mars, with Mars in superior position to Jupiter, glory and honor attend these persons along with support; some distinguish themselves in military service, others move in royal courts or in public affairs, yet they do not preserve maternal or paternal inheritances, and there will be griefs regarding children or they will have few children. If however Mars is in superior position to Jupiter, it makes them sharp and impetuous but prone to failure in life, and laboring in vain while being slandered and accused in public or royal affairs.

Jupiter squaring the Sun is favorable for both the father and the native, 25 for it brings advancement; it also brings associations with great men, and makes them leaders of others. But when the Sun overrules Jupiter, the father is illustrious; yet their possessions are diminished in times of common adversity; and often this comes about through the rising up of enemies.

Jupiter squaring Venus, with Jupiter overruling,
30 such persons will have many friends, and will gain especially from female persons, and will lead a refined life and will be pious; but if Venus overrules Jupiter, they will be amorous and fond of adornment and take pleasure in these things; yet such persons will suffer many setbacks and failures in their affairs.

35 Jupiter squaring Mercury, with Jupiter overruling, they become grammarians or geometers; for some their livelihood will come from public administration and their activities will be refined. But if Mercury overrules Jupiter, they will not lack for a livelihood, yet they will be intemperate in their actions and acting contrary to their own interests; and they shun good things as though they were bad, while they choose evils as though they were goods; and often such people flee from some spontaneous good that comes their way, and those whom they benefit are treated with ingratitude by such people, and they receive no recompense, but procure good things on their own.

Jupiter squaring the Moon, with Jupiter in superior position at a diurnal or nocturnal nativity, renders the mother fortunate and the native superior to his parents, and glorifies him with honors, distinctions, and good repute. But when the Moon is in superior position to Jupiter, the configuration is indeed glorious and brings associations with rulers, yet at certain times it harms, or diminishes the activity he pursues.

Mars squaring the Sun, with Mars in superior position: the natives are frequently ill and make no progress; and if they do advance, they will fall into many adversities. But when the Sun is in superior position, it is harsh for both the child and the father; they stumble in their affairs and their possessions are scattered. It also makes them mentally deranged and frenzied, and sometimes even blind; and it is worse at a diurnal nativity.

Mars squaring Venus, with Mars in superior position: wicked judgments, losses, quarrels, and injuries on account of women. And if it is also in a tropical sign, they will be effeminate; and if such a person also has Vital Years, he will sleep beside his own wife or will endure knowing she is committing adultery; and the woman likewise will endure her husband's licentiousness. But if Venus is in superior position to Mars, it produces the same effects, yet covertly and with a sense of shame.

Mars squaring Mercury, with Mars in superior position, is the cause of many terrible things, bringing harm and imprisonments and hindering actions or causing slanders on account of actions; worse in a diurnal nativity, especially if either both are above the earth, or at least Mars is; but in a noctural nativity the terrible things are less. But if Mercury decimates Mars, it produces terrible, villainous people, snatchers of others' property; for such people pass from one to another, so that having brought some evil upon them they will betray them and strip them of their possessions.

Mars squaring the Moon, with Mars in superior position, makes the mother a widow; and diminishes the paternal livelihood and kills the mother herself through blood or violent death; and the one born flees to sacred places and is troubled by phantoms and apparitions; and the evil will be greater when Mars is in the bounds of Saturn; but if the Moon decimates Mars, it indicates an inglorious and impoverished mother, and for the child a downfall of fortune and wanderings.

Standing at the angles and witnessed by benefics, they make men active and distinguished in social gatherings; but when acted upon by malefics, they are grievous both in life and livelihood; and if the Sun and Moon being in angles with one another and aspected by Saturn and Mars, the Moon applies to Jupiter, they will be illustrious, yet envied by many; but if Jupiter is absent, the configuration will bring the greatest and most severe affliction. Mercury and Venus overcoming one another produce refined skills, or make men charming, or eminent teachers; yet the speech of such persons is prone to censure, and in matters of love they are licentious.

The Moon squaring Venus, the Moon being in the superior position, makes them barren but much censured; and these are harmed on account of females or by female persons; but if Venus overcomes the Moon, it provides successive goods, making them active and long-lived; to these it also gives affectionate and chaste wives; and it makes the native himself gracious, well-ordered, and sweet-spoken, yet it makes both themselves and their mothers unstable in marriage; for, it says, they will not be content with one marriage.

The Moon squaring Mercury, the Moon being in the superior position, they will be frivolous, unstable, changeable, untrustworthy, heeded by no one. When Mercury overcomes the Moon, they are intelligent and learned, yet they are troubled by crowds and the multitude; but if Mercury, while overcoming the Moon, is itself overcome by malefics, they will be forgers; and being caught in connection with certain documents, they are confined in prisons and bonds.

On Oppositions.

Saturn in opposition to Jupiter brings grief in business and children; but if Saturn is in the ascendant and Jupiter is setting, they will be late in achieving success.

Saturn in opposition to Mars causes people to fall into life's adversities and serious obstacles, envies and deprivations, bodily afflictions, and dangers to life and children, creates enmities and strife among relatives, destroys fathers before the mother, and brings one trouble after another; and if they are also in watery signs, they cause afflictions from watery sources, making people suffer shipwrecks or bringing upon them floods from rivers and streams.

But often they are also harmed by aquatic creatures or perish by certain poisons. And if the configuration is in the four-footed signs, they die from a fall, or come close to death, when Jupiter looks on; for if he does not look on, the evils are inescapable. But when they are in opposition at the angles, they bring death or separation from family and homeland; they also lead people into subjugation and slavery, even if they are free; while at the succedent houses they cut off hopes and moreover bring demotions in the midst of their times. But when they are in the declining houses they cause less harm, yet nonetheless bring grief, hardships, and downfalls.

Saturn in opposition to the Sun, when Jupiter does not bear witness, the father will be laborious and miserly and maimed, and the possessions and the paternal estate deteriorate, whatever is left to the child; and the father will not die a good death, and the one born will be in great toils, and especially when the configuration occurs in feminine Signs.

Saturn in opposition to Venus makes men lecherous, shameless, and unmarried; and if they do marry, they will take insolent or foreign women, or slaves, or maimed women, and they themselves are also outside the graces of Venus.

Saturn in opposition to Mercury signifies those who are ill-spoken or who stammer, especially when Mercury is in a voiceless sign or under the rays of the Sun; and if Saturn opposes both Mercury and the Moon, the speech will be more severely harmed, unless Mars, looking from somewhere, resolves the affliction; yet Mars frees them from speechlessness, but makes them very laborious, though highly intelligent and experienced; yet there will be no benefit for them from their intelligence and experience, neither acquisition nor profit; they always live in anxiety and gloom, full of pride, and they will witness the deaths of their elder brothers, or they will be the eldest of the others; and for these, the father also dies before the mother.

Saturn in opposition to the Moon destroys the maternal estate and brings upon the mother herself afflictions and labors of hidden places, or portends sorrowful things; and if neither Jupiter nor Venus looks on, she will be in a grievous bodily condition and will endure losses; and among four-footed signs, the harm comes from creatures of the same kind; and if in bestial signs, from wild beasts; and if in human-shaped signs, from men; and if in a watery sign, from waters or from bad humors of the body; and likewise for the one born, unless Jupiter looks upon Venus, there will be bodily injury. In some cases it has blinded their sight, in others it has driven them from their homeland, and in others it has harmed them in various parts of the body.

Jupiter in opposition to Mars makes the life of such persons very irregular, and friends become enemies; some are distressed by the storms arising from rashness and confusion of thought.

Jupiter in opposition to the Sun is a destroyer of the father's possessions; and the one born will be in subjection to his guardians, or slaves, or others of like kind.

Jupiter in opposition to Venus makes men without advancement, and no true friend exists for them; but one thinks one thing and says another, and he will have uprisings from friends, and those who have been benefited by him will become his enemies, and to those to whom he grants gifts he will receive evil recompense in return; yet in certain other matters he will prosper, and his livelihood will be sufficient, and toward his lawful wife he will be unstable, but toward adulterous relations he will be successful. Jupiter in opposition to Mercury is harmful and especially to advocates and orators; for it produces uprisings of crowds and wrath and slanders from certain envious persons toward those of greater standing; they will also witness the deaths of brothers and will have lawsuits against their brothers and their kinsmen by birth. [It should be known that these configurations are effective not only according to the natal position but also according to transits; for example, if at the natal position the Sun was in Scorpio and Mars in Virgo, when Mars by transit comes to Taurus it opposes the natal Sun, and it indicated danger from a height or from fire.] Jupiter in opposition to the Moon, if she is waxing in light, grants precedence and livelihood and signifies distinction and authority, Impetuous in character and yielding to no other.

These effects occur especially when the Moon is in fewer degrees and Jupiter in more; but if she is waning in light, it is dire, for it diminishes all that has been said, and portends other adversities and failures as well.

Mars in opposition to the Sun in a diurnal nativity causes violent deaths or damages the eyesight of the father, and brings dangers from heights and many adversities to the nativity; but by night it renders them powerless and fallen in life.

Mars in opposition to Venus makes men restless and unstable; Venus is malefic with respect to marriage and children; and if also in a tropical sign, it produces the same effects as when they are in square aspect:  for they become forgers and accomplices in poisonings; they continually fall into debts and sureties and shun honest faith, on account of which they are also judged before rulers and they suffer fears; others are driven from their homeland, and especially when Mercury is in the terms of Saturn, whether in a sign or in its own terms or sign.

Mars in opposition to the Moon makes people short-lived or subject to dangers; some remain unmarried, others bury their wives; for these, the end is terrible, for Mars brings madness or surgical operations. δ

Venus in opposition to the Moon bodes ill for marriage; for it either grants no children, or having granted them, destroys them or deprives one of them in some other way; and on account of the women themselves they suffer insults, afflictions, and injuries, for in general the Moon and Venus in square or opposition in every matter cause jealousy.

Mercury in opposition to the Moon stirs up seditions and clamors from the multitude and the people, and produces timidity in speech. [Whatever the stars signify when in trine aspect to one another, they also signify when in sextile, but they produce these effects more weakly and to a lesser degree.]

The Moon in opposition to the Sun becomes a cause of prosperity and glory. In general, every planet in opposition to its own house diminishes all that it itself provides. A. O.

When someone wishes to relocate from place to place or from house to house, let the lord of the Sign be in strength, that is, having a morning appearance or a chrematistic position, being in its own places; and let the Moon also be in her own house and exaltation, adding to her numbers and light, and testified to by benefics, or applying to them or conjoined with them; for in this way the relocation will be most excellent, auspicious, and beneficial. And let not the Lot of Fortune and its lord escape your notice, so that they are in a good position and testimony. And let the lord of the 2nd house and the lord of the 8th house be angular and testified to by benefics. A. O.

G. 1935. From Theodosius, on knowing the day on which a person will die.[1]

When a fixed or bicorporeal sign is on the ascendant at the vernal equinox, we observe the Moon at that same equinox and in which sign it is; if it is in the first six-month period from the equinox, the expected event is at hand; but if it is in the second six-month period, we likewise observe it at the autumnal equinox and in which sign it is; and we say that the expected event will occur on that sign's day. When a tropical sign is on the ascendant, if the hope lies within the first quarter of the time, we observe the Moon at the vernal equinox; if in the second quarter, at the summer solstice; if in the third, at the autumnal equinox; if in the fourth, at the winter solstice, and in which sign it is; and according to that sign's day we make our pronouncement.

Another method: Once death has been made evident by the other methods, look at the vernal equinox to determine which star's day the midheaven belongs to, and when you have found this star — that is, the bound-lord of the midheaven — seek also the bound-lord of its exaltation, and declare that when this planet is exalted and standing in a favorable place and observed by the benefics, there will be glory and good health, but when it is in depression or under the sun's rays or stationary or in inferior position or in square or in opposition from the malefics, there will be death. By way of example: in the year 6573, at the vernal equinox, Leo 18° 15′; midheaven Taurus 9° 30′; the bound-lord of the midheaven is Mercury; its exaltation is Virgo 15°; the lord of the bounds is Venus. If she is afflicted, the outcome must necessarily come to pass.

G. 420. By the protospatharios and strategos of the Cibyrrhaeots, concerning[1] the stars observed by sailors that cause storms and disturbances at sea.

On the 14th of the month of September, the star of the Exaltation of the Precious Cross appears, and a disturbance of the sea arises from a north or southwest wind, prevailing for up to two hours. On the 20th of the same month, the star of Saint Thecla appears, and a disturbance of the sea occurs lasting one hour. On the 6th of October, the star observed for Saint Thomas appears; great rough weather arises at sea, and such a star never passed without a storm (squall?). On the 12th of the same month, the star called the Tail of Taurus appears, and great rough weather and a mighty storm arise at sea. On the 26th of the same month, the star of Saint Demetrius causes a great storm at sea. On the 11th of the month of November, the star of Saint Menas appears, and rough weather and disturbance of the sea arise more than from the other stars. On the 14th of the same month, the star of Saint Philip likewise causes rough weather at sea. From the 15th of the same month begins what is called the Pleiades-setting; and every seventh day, that is from the 15th to the 22nd, a star sets; likewise in succession and on the same days, when the star sets, rough weather arises at sea. This Pleiades-period prevails for 49 days, and in the middle of these days is the star of Saint Nicholas, which likewise causes rough weather.From the same 6th of the month of December until the 4th of January, great rough weather and storms arise at sea. From that same 4th until the 20th of the month of March, the sailors sail having neither much rough weather nor yet complete calm; during the middle of these days there is no observation of stars. From the 25th of the month of March, when spring comes, the pachnitai begin; and the first pachnites prevails for 7 days, and likewise the rest; there are 7 pachnitai following the sequence of the Pleiades-setting. On the first day of the first pachnites, a strong wind called Euros arises, along with lightning and thunder, so that no one is able to sail on such a day; it prevails for two days, and thereafter it spreads and they receive the wind from the left and sail with the right. The more experienced sailors will discern from the waves and currents where they are headed, and on such a day the wind veers southwest, and on the next day rough weather arises; and it prevails until the first day of the second pachnites. The same likewise occurs in the second pachnites; and in the third pachnites there occurs— 28 παχνίται : cf. Lyd. de Ost., ed. Wachsm. 2, p. 130 sq. (F.B.) 36 διαγνώσκονται cod.

there is more stormy weather than among the other frost-sailors; but in the fourth frost-sailor, the stormy weather becomes lighter, and likewise in the fifth, and in the sixth, and in the seventh. On the 11th of the month of May there is the star called the Heaper, and a strong wind arises; and from the 12th day of May until the 24th of the month of June, when the solstice of the Sun also occurs, the sea is sailed without particular observation; for sailors pay no heed to a star or disturbance of the sea. From the 24th of the month of June until the 15th of August, the winds called rhektai blow; and in Syria the south winds blow; for it is by this very wind that they depart from Syria to Romania. Such winds prevail for 49 days, just as with the setting of the Pleiades, and every seventh day a disturbance of the sea occurs; but sailors pay no attention to the remaining stars; for even the aforementioned stars, those who have much experience, even if perhaps a disturbance and stormy weather arise at sea, do not observe them; but they sail even on the days of such stars.

One must know that when stormy weather arises from the south wind, when those departing from Syria set their sails and a north wind meets them and they let the sails loose, the only thing that must be watched is the direction of the waves, so that they keep these at the stern; for from these they discern their course; for if they do not look at these carefully and take aim, they lose their way. One must also know this: that when the rhektes wind blows, they sail from Egypt as far as the fortress of Antioch, which the Saracens quickly call "of the south wind"; and from the fortress of Antioch, that is from the swift one, as far as Tarsus, they sail by the gulf and the north wind; and from that same day until the third hour, in those regions there is a wind called the kirros; and from the third hour until the first hour of the night, a north wind arises.

Know that sailors are very careful about departing and setting sail on a voyage either on the third day or on the fifth, for they observe these 2 days more than the rest; some rarely also observe Saturday, because on it commemoration of the dead takes place and it is a day of mourning; likewise they are very careful also about the day of Holy and Great Thursday, because on it Judas betrayed the Lord; likewise also the day of Holy and Great Friday, because of the crucifixion of the Lord. The fourth of the days, as sailors say, happens to be either wind-bearing or wind-destroying, that is, either productive of storm and heavy seas and causing confusion and instability of the air, or calming the violent wind that was blowing before it and rousing the sea to storm and heavy seas and bringing it to rest and making the air more calm; and Friday among the days, as sailors say, is often seen either making fair weather of the air and sea, or bringing confusion and instability of the air and storm and heavy seas of the sea. Know that even if the whole week has confusion and instability of the air and storm and heavy seas, nonetheless on the Lord's day, that is on the first day, it is impossible that the air should not shift at least a little toward calmer conditions and the sea toward greater tranquility, or that the air should become entirely calm and the sea be brought to complete stillness. But it sometimes happens often that the air remains in the same confusion and instability, and the sea in the same storm and heavy seas, especially if there is a conjunction of the Moon; whether a new moon or a full moon, or from among the stars observed by sailors, or a solar or lunar eclipse — for these too are carefully observed by experienced sailors.

It should be known that if the air is overcast and foggy, so that drizzle or even rain is frequently brought down from the sky on account of such turbulence, and if this condensation of the air increases from the evening or from the afternoon, one must observe the first bird call through the night; and if it does not abate, one must observe the second; and if it still persists, the third; and if it again continues in the same state, one must observe the dawn; and if even then it does not turn to fair weather, one must observe the day and then likewise the rising of the Sun; and if the clouds have certain breaks so that the sky can be seen, there is hope for those who watch these signs that on that day it will clear; but if the contrary happens and the clouds maintain the same continuity and density and no break occurs in them, as has been said, such disturbance persists throughout the whole day, and often toward the ninth or tenth hour or even until evening fair weather comes.
